THE "BEE-HIVE"
THE LARGEST PANT'S GOODS HOUSE IN THE STATE.
TOY-ZIG-ZAGGER.

LADIES', MISSES' AND CHILDREN'S OUTSIDE GARMENTS, SUITS & DRESSES.

Once more it is our pleasure to direct the ladies of New Jersey to our Spring Opening of garments, eclipsing in all the essential features any display it has heretofore been our privilege to offer. Those of the invariable rules upon which the great success of this house is founded, viz.: "Low prices, garments satisfying to the most critical taste." "Prices, within the limits of every one's purse." "Materials, such as can be recommended for good service if" or, in a word, Larger Assortments and Better Values than are obtainable anywhere else without exception. These great inducements should draw every lady to our Department before buying a Spring Garment for self or child.

ICELAND'S FAMOUS ISLE.

A Republic Which Has Existed Under Remarkable Rules.

For Centuries a Seat of Learning and a Home for Free Institutions—Attending Chapter on Its Settlement and Progress.

In the latter part of the ninth century, when Norway was disturbed by political animosities, many of the best men quit their native land, their estates and homes, and settled in Iceland. Here, on an isolated island in the cold North Atlantic, they founded a republic which for centuries flourished, free from the tyranny of kings or any alien government. It was a model republic. The legislative power was vested in the Althing, an assembly where the more influential men met once a year to discuss national questions. In this modest legislature some specimens of oratory and statesmanship were displayed that have never been exceeded. The Althing vies with the immortal Roman senate for the glory of ancient legislation.

The great religion of the Icelanders was the same as that of other Scandinavian nations, their principal gods being Thor and Odin. Christianity was established in the year 1000, and the manner in which it was finally accomplished was notable. All the chiefs, priests and leaders of the island had flocked with their retinues to the Althing. Vague of these had already adopted Christianity; the others were radically opposed to it. A discussion arose as to which religion should be taken as the state religion. Both parties contended strongly for their own views and both prepared for battle, that the sword might decide, but at the last hour a compromise was effected by collecting one man, a man admitted to be the wisest of the land, who should decide the question. His name was Thorgier. He betook himself to his own "booth," where he stayed for three days, not talking with any one and permitting anyone to come near him. Having reached a conclusion, Thorgier arose and went to the Althing. He announced his decision. It was that Christianity should be the religion of the island. Both factions, true to their promise, submitted to the decision.

During this medieval period literature and learning flourished on the island and Iceland came to be known as the "Land of the Hand Ryting and Saga (history)." Hither resorted the historian, and even to-day all the Scandinavian authorities refer to "Todd heard" was implored. The conversation between "Todd-heard" and the distinguished writer was quite interesting, according to the Observer. "Just step out on the street," she told him, "and ask the first man or woman you meet." "I can't," he replied, "as there is no one here to watch the store."

Finding that this went and "Toll-heard" kept her word by keeping her ear to the receiver at Utica, forty miles from the scene.

Royal Musicians.

Nearly every member of the ruling families of Europe is a clever performer on some musical instrument. It rarely happens, however, that these royal accomplishments are put to a practical test of merit, but the story told of the late playing of the dukes of Oporto, the portuguese king's brother, is to the point. On a wager with one of the nobles of the Lisbon court, he once set out in disguise to play at the village fair for a fete for a week, and succeeded without difficulty in getting an engagement in the orchestra. He played the violin, and at the end of the week he received from the leader of the orchestra a very flattering letter of recommendation.

STARVING RATS.

Overboard Scene on Board a Deserted Vessel on the English Coast.

A correspondent of the Newcastle (England) Chronicle, describing scenes on the Northumberland coast, tells a curious story al-out rats: "What a scene of devastation did St. Mary's island witness after the result of the bowling up of the Gothenburg City. I was one of a party that went on board that ill-fated vessel, and by the time we got up, and saw a sight to be remembered. I shall never forget it. To all appearance the vessel was deserted, for the crew might have been sailing comfortably out of the ocean, save for the absence of any apparent life on board of her. But we had no sooner put foot on deck than a sight presented itself to us in such a manner that each of us as had got on board had to make tracks for the rigging, while the rest of us fled back into the boats. Rats! I never saw so many in my life, and never hope to again. Hungry, hungry, lank-looking fellows, many of them with their tails chewed off, swarmed up from below in nevending shoals, squealing and fighting, squirming over one another in a manner sickening and horrible to behold, particularly to those of us up in the rigging. At last we cut off some loose ropes, knotted them into convenient lengths, and then armed we descended and attacked the rodents, eventually succeeding in beating them back to the boat. Anyone would have supposed that they knew by instinct the impending fate of the vessel, for the moment we saw us over the side than they began to swarm down the ropes and try to enter the boats, and in the end only with difficulty were we able to beat them off before reaching the boat clear, and they swam to the land, and I can only say that anglfish and mad frenzy as we rowed away from the vessel's side. They were for the most part on the island when the mainland to swim ashore. They could not find on the thinly-wooded coast, so that was washed ashore to warm the skins of the coast folk." While every effort was made to exterminate the rats, splinters, the deckhouse, strange to say, came ashore on the island intact."

MEAT EATERS.

Animal Food the Most Conducive to Prolonged Physical Strength.

Many races of men live entirely on animal food, and these are the most hardy and from all I have been able to gather are the most active. In the correspondent of the Gentleman's Magazine, the most free from diseases of all kinds, are the Esquimaux and the Red Indians: "They are all horsemen, or rather, pass their lives on horseback. Most of the climbing they do is mounting but in summer and freezing in winter, these brave men, who have never been subdued, are entirely naked and have not even a covering for their heads. They live entirely on flesh, but they have no fixed place of residence. When the pasture is good there are they to be found, until it is consumed by their horses, and they instantly move to another spot. They have neither bread, fruit, nor vegetables, but live entirely on the flesh of their mares."

Describing the effect on himself of this diet, Hearne says: "In short, as I had been riding three or four months, and had lived on beef and water, I found myself as strong again as I was at first, and could not speak; yet a few hours' sleep upon my saddle on the ground always completely restored me that for a week I could daily be upon my horse for many hours together, but still two or three hours after sunset, and have relatively tired ten or twelve horses a day. This will explain the hardiness of those which people in South America are said to ride, which I am confident could only be done on beef. Indeed, the Gauchos of the Argentine Republic live entirely on roast beef and salt, scarcely ever tasting bread, vegetables, or any table food, and their sole beverage is mate or Paraguay tea taken without sugar."

LIFE IN GRUB STREET.

It Wasn't Pleasant When John Forty "Starved" Were Poet of It.

Up to the seventeenth century Grub street was a narrow lane of mean houses, chiefly inhabited by beggars. It was a street tenanted by beggars, and by poor authors, who were in everything else their supporters and companions. The Grub street poets of the period were the literary drudges of the booksellers, having a fixed task of so many lines to write, which Grub street of old and Milton street to-day is the world for the great men of the time used to scorn.

Grub street also housed such famous writers as "Elkanah Settle, the Giant Killer," "Tom Hickathrift," "The Wise Men of Gotham," and scores of others were poor authors, who were the hacks of literary rest began to popularize Grub street in say numbers during the early days of the eighteenth century, of seditious and libelous pamphlets were circulated, and as the authors, for safety, had to move from place to places, they found a fitting retreat in the maze of alleys which webbed the Grub street district. At any rate, says the Collector, by the commencement of the eighteenth century Grub street had become quite notorious as the poor author's quarter of London. All the authors but a very favored few were poor men. The life of a literary hack author was that of a modern tramp, only he did more work and obtained fewer square meals.

Estimated Her Needs.

European ladies are often invited to visit the harems of the rich Moors in Morocco. Some years ago one of the ladies of the sultan's harem—a beautiful young girl—fainted at the sight of the lady visitors removing her gloves. The young lady thought she was removing a thick skin from her hands, and when the sight frightened her so much that it was some time before she could regain consciousness.

WALT WHITMAN'S TOMB.

It Is a Pretty Hillside Vault Built of Green Ice Boulders.

During Walt Whitman's outdoor trip last summer he was frequently driven out to Harleigh cemetery to personally superintend the construction of his tomb. The site, the material and the manner of construction are all of his choosing, and he took pleasure in watching the work as it progressed. Two miles from the Philadelphia ferries, on the main road to Haddonfield, lies Harleigh cemetery, beautifully situated in one of the few picturesque spots of Camden's neighborhood. Passing along on the entrance road by well-kept lawns dotted with flower beds the visitor comes to a little valley in which section the land has led to gravel pits on either side. It is here, among a cluster of beech and magnolia trees, at the head of the lane, that Walt Whitman selected the spot for his tomb.

WALT WHITMAN'S TOMB.

The vault is built into the hill on the west side of the ground and is composed of enormous bowlders of granite. The stone door is hung on massive brass hinges and requires the efforts of three strong men to swing it. The two front stones stand 18ex immovable sentries and are very impressive. A solid block of granite is laid across these on the top and a heavy triangular capstone is placed on this, with the simple inscription: "Walt Whitman," carved out of the solid rock.

POOL-PLAYING MARVELS.

A Six-Year-Old Chicago Boy Handles the Cue Like a Veteran.

Joseph H. Zilligen plays pool. He is six years old and forty-two inches tall. He is a wonder. He won't allow the breaking up of the Gothenburg City. I was one of a party that went on board that ill-fated vessel, and by the time we got up, and saw a sight to be remembered. I shall never forget it. To all appearance the vessel was deserted, for the crew might have been sailing comfortably out of the ocean, save for the absence of any apparent life on board of her. LITTLE JOSEPH PLAYS POOL.

Frederick Overhole for a purse in a few weeks, and is regarded by all who frequent his father's billiard hall to be a veritable wonder. He is managed by Josef Hofman or Wallis Eddington.

The little fellow was born June 18, 1886, in Chicago, and only exhibited his unusual ability a few months ago. In handling the cue his childishness is not apparent, for he plays with the strength and precision of a full grown man. He uses a bench to compensate for his size, but peering over the cushions grasps the cue as well as if he had built and practiced the ball. He sometimes is obliged to get on top of the table to execute a shot, but he is very clever at that, and of the cue where the ball is out of reach. He is an intelligent youngster and not particularly precocious except in playing pool.

Curious Facts Concerning Gold.

Most people believe that there is no known chemical that can be any affected upon particles of gold. This is a mistake. Mercury will not dissolve as readily as aqua fortis does the baser metals. A mixture of nitre and hydrochloric acid will entirely unlock and have not even a covering for their head. They live entirely on fruits, but they have no fixed place of residence. When the pasture is good there are they to be found, until it is consumed by their horses, and they instantly move to another spot. They have neither bread, fruit, nor vegetables, but live entirely on the flesh of their mares."

AN OCEAN MONSTER.

Picture of an Ugly Creature Caught Near San Francisco.

Some Say It Is a Fish, Others Vow That It Is a Countless Case of Serpent —Interesting Story of a Learned Professor.

Oakland has a something for which every body is trying to find a name, says the San Francisco Chronicle. Some call it a fish and others class it with the serpents. As it was caught in the bay the fish theorists maintain that their position is correct, but the contrary minded point to the barrel-shaped body and the lack of fins as proof that the thing in support of their belief that it is a snake, and an ugly one at that. The excitement was precipitated a while and the queer thing without a name was taken to the university at Berkeley, but even the learned professors of that classic retreat gave up guessing at it. At all events it is the greatest looking monster ever captured in the bay of San Francisco.

Some people claim that the Atlantic ocean has been recently permitted the one, only and original sea serpent to get away from them and have in its stead a thing about the monster that beats them out. From the tip of its ugly nose to the end of its ugly tail the thing's body is five and one-half feet long. It is round in shape and the body tapers from the middle equally to each end. The captors state that it wriggled very snakishly through the water. The thing has not any but well-constructed fish. The head of the monster is enough to scare a delirium tremens patient into an insane asylum. It is a very large head, shaped like a stallion's, with huge staring round eyes, two small ears that lie close to the head and a very large mouth armed with two rows of formidable looking fangs and a forked tongue. The tongue, the captors aver, is darted out into the water of the mouth when the thing was alive. The head has patches of black silky hair scattered over it.

A son of William Reuter and a friend were the captors. They were fishing about one-fourth mile off Goat island when they noticed the monster wriggling in the water. The boat's painter was speedily converted into a lariat, and when the fish-snake poked its hideous head above the water it was made acquainted with the rope. The fish had a hard fight with the monster, but they finally landed it in the boat and conveyed to the Oakland, where it has been on exhibition in front of Reuter's dye works on Washington street.

The thing weighs 125¾ pounds.

Later a telegram from Oakland stated that a learned professor who had been studying all day and far into the darkness over the matter had found out what the monster really was and triumphantly pronounced its name.

The professor's designation of the snakefish's snakishness is Amphisbaena, at least that is the telegraph operator's version of it.

At all events it is a very queer fish, and it is found only in the Pacific ocean and the arms thereof.

Odd Piece of Wood From a Beam.

Mr. Edward Jones, who resides at Alexandria, Va., was chopping some oak wood, and when he came across a piece that was very hard to split. He worked at it till it came apart, but was astonished to find he found a snake in the center of the tough piece, rolled up in a ball, with no means of escape. The wood had grown around the reptile to the thickness of 9 inches on all sides, protected and hidden from view. The snake had been there for many years. Some who viewed the stick and the smooth cavity where his snakeship had lain estimated that not less than a hundred years had elapsed since he took up his abode where he was found. The most curious part of the story is that the snake was not hard, dry or petrified; on the contrary, he was as soft and as spry as he would be rolled up in winter quarters. Mr. Jones had several handsome offers for either the snake or the split stick showing his abode, but all offers were promptly refused.

Civilization Does It.

Portland, Ore., used to be quite a center for collecting furs, but year by year, as the country is settled up, the fur-bearing animals grow more scarce and the amount of furs marketed there becomes less.

An Iowa Freak.

A Marion county (Iowa) physician is the owner of a remarkable human monstrosity, a male child, 16 inches long, weighing 9½ pounds, the head the perfect counterpart of that of some gigantic serpent.

THE MAORI VERSION.

Tradition of Savages Respecting the Great Deluge.

According to the addition in the Ngi-tahu tribe of Maoris, says Colonies and India, men had become very numerous and evil practices had arisen. The tribes quarreled and wars were frequent. The worship of Tane was neglected and the Supreme Being entirely denied. Man utterly refused to believe the teachings of Ta-whiri-matea and Tawaki-nui, preaching the true religion of Heaven and earth by Tane, and at length warned those two devout men when they continued their teaching. Then these two teachers were very angry and went to the forest, where they drew totara and other trees, which they dragged together to the source of the river Tahinga (tapiha). There they made the timber together with vines of the pirita and rengo and made a very wide raft. Then they made incantations, and built a house on the raft, and put much food into it—fern root, karaka berries, potatoes and fish. Next they repeated their incantations, and prayed that rain might descend in such abundance as would cause the sea to rise in power of Tane, and prove the truth of his existence, and the necessity of the destruction of worship for life and for peace, and to avert evil and death. Then they went on board the frail craft. They made incantations, and prayed to Tane, upon which the rain descended MONOPOLY.

Monopoly, or the avaricious combination of capital, is at enmity with the just privileges and interests of the people, and therefore to sternly oppose it is a duty the Democratic party cannot ignore.

The modern formation of Trusts, so artfully called, for the absolute control of the production and price of leading articles of necessity, with the daring and determination of destroying all legitimate competition, is one of the most glaring attempts to defraud popular rights that mercenary greed ever invented.

Individual prosperity is the diffusion of wealth, the life-blood of healthy enterprise and business activity, and the sure reward of industry and labor. Whatever tends to curtail its sphere of action, or to deaden its efforts to permanently exist, is a public foe which ought to be effectually suppressed.

Monopoly, dressed as it may be to deceive, is that very kind of foe.

An American citizen is in law and fact a freeman. He possesses the inalienable right to follow without interference any honest trade or vocation he may deem proper, and even as a small capitalist he is as fully entitled to enjoy money-making opportunities as the man or possessor of millions.

To deprive him of those rights is to rob him of freedom, and when freedom is thrust out servitude is sure to stalk in.

FREE TRADE.

We have at last a political party in the United States who openly declare for absolutely free trade.

The Prohibition party of Texas recently in State Convention assembled at Waco thus resolved:

"We are opposed to tariff, either for revenue or protection, and favor absolute free trade, believing the revenue needed for the support of the Government should be raised by means of a graduated income tax."

What will those Import-prohibiting Republicans who favor a tariff for revenue think through so loudly casting sensible tariff reform Democrats "free traders" say to that?

The Prohibitionists deserve credit for one thing, and that is their distinct utterance of sentiment. They do not beat round the bush in search of words to disguise meaning, and so far as freedom of trade is concerned, those of Texas are evidently only prohibitionists in name.

The old-time coupler would certainly harmonize with their views.

It ran somewhat as follows:

I've known a number of men more than two,
If occurrence roamed o'er every one.
Like Neptune in his car;
If the professors each clime could space
Might come and get as three as six,
Dressed by any tailor."

ORGANIZE!

The Summit Record, edited by Assemblyman Lane, voices the sentiment of the Republicans of Summit in a plenty in the following terms:

"It is most time the Democrats in the various sections of Union County began to prepare machinery for the approaching political campaign by perfecting a thorough organization. It is not necessary to thoroughly discuss issues of the issues involved on the minds of all Democrats the wisdom and prudence of having perfected a close oversight that is to be made on the Democratic stronghold of Union county.

"If the signs of the times indicate anything, they predict a fierce and bitter struggle, to carefully planned and daringly executed effort of our Republican friends to capture the offices. The official life of Union County. This is apparent in the increased activity in their own party organization and in their unceasing efforts to foment strife and discord within the Democratic ranks.

"To fully meet and effectively overthrow this form of guerilla warfare the Democrats must organize in every voting precinct and for such work there is no time like the present. Every Democrat should feel it his duty to see that his party has at least one well officered organization in his precinct. Here in Summit that result can be effected by reviving or re-organizing the Democratic association which was such effective work in the Presidential campaign of 1888.

"With such a club as the nucleus of an organization around which the members of the party, old and young, may rally there can be no doubt of the result in November and with a series of similar clubs throughout Union County the amount of good that may be accomplished for the party is simply incalculable and will more than repay the workers within the party ranks for the slight labor involved in carrying this suggestion into execution.

What are the Plainfield Democrats doing? Is there any organization outside of that ancient coterie known as the "Jackson-ian Democratic Association?" We think not, and it is about time there was some sort of organization as the Record recommends, and personal affairs laid aside. There never was any need of such bickering and we would like to see a new blood called to put new life into the Democratic party of Plainfield.

COULDN'T BE BETTERED.

We cut the following communication from the New York World, and we echo the sentiment therein contained. No better man could be selected for the position:

To the Editor of the World:

In glancing over the World of Sunday it brings to mind a name which you may have overlooked in your preparation for Governor of the State of New Jersey; one who has represented the State with honor, and who is now in no way identified with any clique or faction—that man is Vice-Chancellor, ex-Congressman and ex-Governor Robert S. Green. His name has been very frequently mentioned in the press of Jersey and I would ere this have been a prospective candidate were it not doubtful whether he would consent. In my opinion, he would make a personal sacrifice by consenting to a third term as Governor. His past history justifies the hope that he would put aside personal considerations, if by so doing he would serve the party to whose principles he has been devoted all his life.

You will find that the suggestion that Robert S. Green should be our next candidate for Governor is most enthusiastically approved by the Democracy of this State from the Delaware to the Hudson.

A UNION COUNTY DEMOCRAT.
Rahway, May 2.

The election of delegates to the Democratic convention in the Congressional districts of the State, is a reminder of the changes that have occurred in these districts since the last National census. The First and Second remain unchanged. The Third District, which formerly included Union is now composed of Somerset, Middlesex and Monmouth Counties. In the Fourth District the Counties of Sussex, Warren, Hunterdon and Morris are grouped with the Essex townships of Belleville, Bloomfield, Caldwell, Essex Fells, Franklin, Montclair and Livingston. The Fifth District is composed of Bergen and Passaic Counties, with Guttenberg, North Bergen, Union, Weehawken, West Hoboken and Union town in Union, in Hudson County. Newark comprises the Sixth District, and Jersey City, Hoboken, Harrison and Kearny the Seventh District. The new Eighth District is composed of Union County, Orange city, Clinton, South Orange, West Orange, Millburn and Bayonne.

What the Peaches Died Of.

[From The New York Tribune.]

Nearly four years ago Deacon Elisha Pratt, of New Providence, N. J., died of cholera morbus after eating a hearty dinner, and the affair took place in a strange memorial of the event in the parlor. Under a large glass case is an enormous silver platter. On this platter, arranged in regular order, are portions of watermelons, tables, watermelon, cucumber, ice cream, pie, etc., moulded in wax. They represent as nearly as possible the exact quantity of each of these articles that the deacon ate the evening before he died. They stand on the platter in just the order that the real articles were discovered by Mr. Pratt. Scattered through the solids are goblets full of wax, colored to represent the elder that the deacon imbibed during the same dinner. Each wax imitation is perfect and looks as though it were a real piece of meat or portion of fruit. The quantity represents one ounce. On top of the glass case is a little arch made of solid silver. Above the arch is the silver figure of an angel blowing a trumpet. Suspended from the centre of the arch is a tiny tablet of white marble, on which, in deep black letters, are engraved the following words: "This is what the deacon died of."

So Limits To His Growth.

L. S. Plaut & Co. of the Newark Sun Hive have again found it necessary to enlarge their establishment, this time adding to their already extensive area an additional space of over 10,000 square feet. This is the natural result of aiming to make their interest and those of their customers identical.

Extensive alterations are now under way and until completed rare values in new and desirable kinds of merchandise are proclaimed from the bills. Interesting reading on page three will interest our readers more fully.

LIVELY TIMES IN FANWOOD TOWNSHIP.

Nobody Knows Who Called the Meeting, but It Was Made a Scamp the Whole Of Lasted.

The voters of Fanwood township had a lively time Monday night. Someone had issued an anonymous circular calling for a meeting of citizens in the Fanwood club-house to condemn the action of the town committee in granting liquor licenses in a promiscuous manner. The movement of the club-house for the use of the club-house had not even been asked for, and at 8 o'clock, the hour set in the circular, the house was in total darkness and a crowd of noisy people hung about on the lawn outside, wondering when the janitor would show up. Entrance was finally obtained, and the crowd flocked into the hall. Everybody waited expectantly for someone to start the ball rolling, but though the stuffy persons of the locality thumped the floor vigorously, with their feet and stirringly whistled and hat-called no one took on himself the responsibility of calling the meeting to order. Every attempt to organize in a proper and parliamentary manner was therefore received with howls of derision. Somebody nominated Mr. Keeler, for chairman, but like all the others was unceremoniously hooted down.

Harry F. Robinson said that he did not wish the one who had issued the call would step forward and take charge, now that he was present. Some one "did," and others expressed a similar desire. Finally George R. Nichols was unanimously elected presiding officer, but he promptly refused to have anything to do with conducting the meeting, and took occasion to denounce in ringing tones the person who had too cowardly to come forth and father the affair and meeting. As he who had called the meeting would not appear, Mr. Nichols moved to adjourn.

This motion was received with much applause, but there was a chorus of noes as well as a loud shout of ayes, when the question was put to vote.

Herschel Reed announced that the motion to adjourn was carried, and most of those present seemed inclined to take the decision of town clerk and postmaster as final, and began to move out. A few tried to hear some speech-making, and these made loud assent to Mr. Robinson's statement that the motion was lost.

Before the crowd could disperse, the Hon. George Kyte had jumped to his feet and begun a speech. Mr. Kyte is recognized as one of the most substantial citizens of the township, having served several terms as freeholder and assemblyman, and his words are bound to be received with respect. Therefore the people listened attentively to his remarks.

Mr. Kyte said that the town committeemen had been shamefully abused for granting liquor licenses. All the censure he had heard was very unjust. The committee had only done its duty in every respect. The license applications were presented to them for action and they had to grant to such applicants as had no question raised against them. The only time to protest was when the applications were presented. It was folly to remain silent until after the licenses had been granted, and then come forward with a great hue and cry. Such conduct he roundly censured. So long as he was a committeeman he would vote in accord with the wishes of the majority of his constituents as he understood them to be. There was no reason for the abuse that had been heaped on the authorities. He was heartily tired, anyway, of having this unfair question upon the liquor license question. He wished the Legislature would take the power away from the township committee and vest it in the courts. Indeed, should they do so the township voters had in their own hands: they had only to turn out in favor of the public, secure a total vote of 300, and then the courts under the present law would have sole power in the matter and the votes could send in their petitions and be heard at length on each case.

Mr. Kyte's eloquent oratory was received with considerable applause, and seemed to put an end to the whole matter; but Thomas S. Young, a strong temperance man, made a vigorous speech strongly taking exception to some of the committeeman's remarks. Capt. Benjamin Tuso also made some sensational remarks, concerning the prevailing method of securing signatures to the license applications.

When the various hot-heads had thus given vent to their spleen, Mr. Kyte suggested that it would be a good thing for the meeting to take up some important public question for debate, such as water. This proposition, however, met with little favor. The voters had come out to talk on and hear about the whiskey question, and didn't want to be put off with so tame a thing as water. So they began to slide out of the room one by one. Presently the hall was vacant; the great meeting was over. It was exciting while it lasted, but as in the fable of the man who tried to shear a pig it was a case of great cry and little wool.

If the anti-water advocates were in search of an impressive temperance lecture, however, they had it in the person and conduct of a young fellow apparently representing an alleged newspaper, whose antics furnished much amusement for the village idlers, and who when in the hall, scratching with its pencil on loose sheets of paper, had to be so heavy that he fell from his chair sprawling over the floor, smearing himself with the tobacco-juice with which he had liberally flooded the floor before his fall. All this was a great treat for the natives, who had n't had so much fun and excitement in many months.

Knights Templar Choose Their Grand Warder for Plainfield.

The thirty-fourth capclave, or annual meeting, of the Grand Commandery of Knights Templar was held in Masonic Temple, Trenton, Tuesday, and was the most successful in point of attendance, ever held in this State. Every Commandery in the State was represented by its present and past officers. The business of the meeting was conducted in secret as far as the general public is concerned, which is a matter essential to all secret orders.

At the close of the business session new officers were chosen for the ensuing year as follows: Right Eminent Grand Commander—William F. Muchmore, of Morristown; Deputy Grand Commander, Warren Dobbs, of Jersey City; Grand Generalissimo, James Schuyler, of Hackensack; Captain General, Edward Mills, of Camden; Grand Prelate, Thomas Godson, of Newark; Senior Grand Warden, Robert Dingwell, of Newark; Junior Grand Warden, William J. Lockwood, of Paterson; Grand Treasurer, Fred G. Wiese, of Bordentown; Grand Recorder, Charles Bechtel, of Trenton; Grand Standard Bearer, Alfred J. Briggs, of Riverton; Grand Sword Bearer, John V. Alstrom, of Long Branch; Grand Warden, William H. Sebring, of Plainfield; Grand Captain of the Guard, Samuel G. Bennett, of Trenton.

Immediately after the election the new officers were installed, and the last one presiding the business of the meeting.

The Familiar Face Missed from the Parlors' High Tea.

The Ministers' Association of Plainfield met at the residence of the Rev. and Mrs. Jacob Manning of Somerville. The regular paper was read by the Rev. C. L. Goodrich, on "The Progressive Revelation of God in the Bible." The subject was discussed by the brethren, who were sorry to miss from their social monthly gathering the Rev. Messrs. Ketchum and Hiles. Nine members of the association were present and the table for 12 was filled, at which they were charmingly entertained by Mrs. Bodman.

BURNED TO DEATH.

The Nineteen-Year-Old Daughter of a Prominent New Jersey Farmer Loses Her Life Trying to Save Her Colt.

[From The Press of May 11.]

Augusta Vanderbeek, the nineteen-year-old daughter of Hon. Garret Vanderbeek, a prominent farmer of Lamington, lived twelve miles from Somerville, on the road to White House, perished between 12 and 1 yesterday morning while making a fruitless attempt to rescue her favorite colt from her father's burning barn. She was a cousin of Freeholder Vanderbeek of this city, and her father is a brother-in-law of Mrs. Elijah J. Cloth.

The fire broke out a few minutes after midnight. It was first seen by neighbors, who hurried to assemble their forces. The alarm was one of the first to awake Miss Augusta Vanderbeek. She sprang out of bed, slipped on her shoes and rushed from the house in her night dress. Her brother Archer was just ahead of her.

"I'll save Lady," you save Tom," she shouted to her brother.

Daisy was a month-old colt. She fallen a prey to the fire at its birth. The colt was with its mother in the westerly side of the barn, while the horse, Tom, was in the opposite end.

Archer Vanderbeek was so quick that the rest of the family were unaware of her intentions. Her brother was the only person who knew that she had left her room. They reached the barn, but did not come out. Yesterday morning her charred remains were found in the ruins.

The barn was a large frame structure, and was filled with hay and contained other buildings, used for storing wagons, farming implements, and the products of Mr. Vanderbeek's estate. Eight horses, fifteen cattle and Farmer Vanderbeek's fine carriage horses, all but one, were driven out. The contents of the buildings, except an old wagon, were burned.

The girl's fate was unknown to any one until about 9 o'clock yesterday morning in the excitement at the fire the family and neighbors who had rallied to save the property did not miss the young daughter. Her mother found she had left her room in her nightdress, and at once asked for her. One of the neighbors said he thought he had seen her on the road leading into the heart of the village, and he presumed she was running to summon help. He was not certain about it, how ever. Then the girl's brother, Archer, came in and said he ran from the house with Augusta behind him, and she was shouting that she was going to save Daisy.

The villagers were hauling from the smoking embers the carcasses of the unfortunate horses and cows. In the southeastern corner of the main building a human form was uncovered. Both legs from the knees down were burned to ashes and the rest of the body was charred. Those who had heard of the girl's disappearance at once thought it was her body. They were not certain, however, and, before information could be given to the authorities. The doctor arrived in half an hour and immediately pronounced the body to be that of the girl. The dreadful discovery was then made known to the family.

When the girl rushed into the barn the entire upper part was in flames. The colt and its mother were in the northeast corner of the barn. It is supposed that as the girl had no sooner crossed the threshhold than the flames shot across the doorway and hemmed her only way to escape. Over the spot where her remains were found was a haymek about four feet from the floor. Finding herself imprisoned and surrounded by flames she made a desperate effort to save herself. The barn had no windows and the door by which she entered was the only way out.

Archer opened the door on the side he ran in, but was driven back by the flames and smoke. He then worked to save the house and gave no more thought to his sister until her disappearance became known.

The identification of the body was based upon the charred shoes of the girl's feet and fragments of a knit woollen jacket, the jacket Miss Vanderbeek usually wore under her night-dress. Ester Conover Brady's clothes yesterday morning the remains were removed to the house.

Miss Vanderbeek was well-known throughout this section. She was a fairly, some blonde and was very popular. Her funeral will take place to-morrow afternoon. It will be conducted by the Rev. Garland Anderson, pastor of the Washington Presbyterian church, of which she was one of the leading members.

Grocer Cornelius Vanderbeek from Raritan early in the morning, and after taking the statements of the witnesses he reported the girl's death to prosecutor Keasbey of Somerville, who has an office in THE PRESS building this city. Mr. Steele has put the case into the hands of Manning Crow, Somerville's chief of police, who will endeavor to find what incendiary is responsible for the girl's death and the destruction of the barns.

All of the horses and cattle belonging to Mr. Vanderbeek were burned to death, and the only thing rescued from the half-dozen out buildings was an old farm wagon. The loss is between $5,000 and $7,000.

HE WILL FIGHT THE READING.

Governor Abbett Orders Legal Proceedings Begun to Forfeit the Charters of the Leased Roads in This State.

Governor Abbett, Allan McDermott, Attorney-General John P. Stockton, and Barker Gummere, sr., held an extended conference yesterday afternoon on the purpose of defining a plan of procedure against the Reading railroad now operating other roads in the State. After the conference the Governor accorded us an interview to THE PRESS and other reporters and gave information that proceedings would be begun both in connection with and to discover the circumstances of the roads forfeited because of a violation of the statute.

The first steps will be taken in chancery, so that a preliminary injunction can be obtained and after that a decree and injunction secured restraining those corporations from operating and collecting fares and prevent any increase in the price of coal. When asked if there would be a special session of the Legislature, the Governor said that he could not think it necessary. He, however, will leave the matter open until he sees the course of the litigation, and if there is not one enough he will secure additional legislation.

The Governor is of the opinion that it will take but a few weeks to prepare the necessary papers.

An Old Landmark Gone.

Last week the large barn opposite the Jersey Central station at Lorraine was torn down to give way for other buildings. A. D. Thompson of Plainfield owns forty acres of beautiful high rolling ground at this place, and the contractors are grading new avenues and streets through it. Grand Street is to be opened up to it, this property at once, and many improvements will be made.

A STORY FOR GIRLS.

Read by Leaders Up in a Room Where Two Men Were Playing Checkers.

Agnes Silverton and her two dearest friends, Susie Ellis and Jessie Thomas, were spending the afternoon in the library of the house. It was one of those summer-like days which Dame Nature sometimes gives us in the early spring. They were taking these tastes of nature on the ground, which the sun had set to thawing, and which the rays of light in the west, had rendered as soft as heavy padding.

"Oh, girls!" cried Susie Ellis, who had been looking out from the window, "there's a party that was going on in the center of the room, and now something at the window, and one, another of a boy. I am sure it must be a bear, for the footprints are too big for Pluto, and they are not like Fido's. Oh, girls, I'm afraid!" and in a moment "a bear's."

In an instant all the doll-games in the house were deserted by their hostesses, and the three little girls, with wide-open eyes, were standing out of the dining-room, looking at the impression of round holes in the snow which led from the open front gate across the garden, and right through it, under the bank of the house.

Before they could present a curious noise was heard from the kitchen, which adjoined the dining-room. It was sort of a rattling, scuffling against the door that led from the kitchen into the back yard, with now and then a scraping of the floor. Agnes was terribly frightened, but she gloves was trying to unlatch it.

"It is a bear," shrieked Ruth, "because I know I have stood on those kind legs and try to open doors with their front paws. Just then a cold gust of wind came in under the crack of the door leading to the kitchen, denoting that the door from the kitchen into the back yard had been opened. With a feeling of terror the three children rushed for a door which opened upon a flight of stairs leading from the room to the parlor, and from which Agnes and Susie had seen Ruth and her brother, Arthur, come in and seat her on the road leading into the heart of the village, and he presumed she was running to summon help. He was not certain about it, how ever. Then the girl's brother, Arthur, came in and seat he ran from the house with Augusta behind him, and she was shouting that she was going to save Daisy.

The villagers were hauling from the smoking embers the carcasses of the unfortunate horses and cows. In the southeastern corner of the main building a human form was uncovered. Both legs from the knees down were burned to ashes and the rest of the body was charred. Those who had heard of the girl's disappearance at once thought it was her body. They were not certain, however, and, before information could be given to the authorities. The doctor arrived in half an hour and immediately pronounced the body to be that of the girl. The dreadful discovery was then made known to the family.

When the girl rushed into the barn the entire upper part was in flames. The colt and its mother were in the northeast corner of the barn. It is supposed that as the girl had no sooner crossed the threshhold than the flames shot across the doorway and hemmed her only way to escape. Over the spot where her remains were found was a haymek about four feet from the floor. Finding herself imprisoned and surrounded by flames she made a desperate effort to save herself. The barn had no windows and the door by which she entered was the only way out.

Archer opened the door on the side he ran in, but was driven back by the flames and smoke. He then worked to save the house and gave no more thought to his sister until her disappearance became known.

The identification of the body was based upon the charred shoes of the girl's feet and fragments of a knit woollen jacket, the jacket Miss Vanderbeek usually wore under her night-dress. Ester Conover Brady's clothes yesterday morning the remains were removed to the house.

Miss Vanderbeek was well-known throughout this section. She was a fairly, some blonde and was very popular. Her funeral will take place to-morrow afternoon. It will be conducted by the Rev. Garland Anderson, pastor of the Washington Presbyterian church, of which she was one of the leading members.

Grocer Cornelius Vanderbeek from Raritan early in the morning, and after taking the statements of the witnesses he reported the girl's death to prosecutor Keasbey of Somerville, who has an office in THE PRESS building this city. Mr. Steele has put the case into the hands of Manning Crow, Somerville's chief of police, who will endeavor to find what incendiary is responsible for the girl's death and the destruction of the barns.

All of the horses and cattle belonging to Mr. Vanderbeek were burned to death, and the only thing rescued from the half-dozen out buildings was an old farm wagon. The loss is between $5,000 and $7,000.

HE WILL FIGHT THE READING.

Governor Abbett Orders Legal Proceedings Begun to Forfeit the Charters of the Leased Roads in This State.

Governor Abbett, Allan McDermott, Attorney-General John P. Stockton, and Barker Gummere, sr., held an extended conference yesterday afternoon on the purpose of defining a plan of procedure against the Reading railroad now operating other roads in the State. After the conference the Governor accorded us an interview to THE PRESS and other reporters and gave information that proceedings would be begun both in connection with and to discover the circumstances of the roads forfeited because of a violation of the statute.

The first steps will be taken in chancery, so that a preliminary injunction can be obtained and after that a decree and injunction secured restraining those corporations from operating and collecting fares and prevent any increase in the price of coal. When asked if there would be a special session of the Legislature, the Governor said that he could not think it necessary. He, however, will leave the matter open until he sees the course of the litigation, and if there is not one enough he will secure additional legislation.

The Governor is of the opinion that it will take but a few weeks to prepare the necessary papers.

An Old Landmark Gone.

Last week the large barn opposite the Jersey Central station at Lorraine was torn down to give way for other buildings. A. D. Thompson of Plainfield owns forty acres of beautiful high rolling ground at this place, and the contractors are grading new avenues and streets through it. Grand Street is to be opened up to it, this property at once, and many improvements will be made.

OUR BABY.

What ails our home with joy and light?
What pulls pa's hair with all its might?
And keeps ma's temper in a pickle?
Our baby.

But who will all our sore cops repay,
When we are safe in our sunset stay,
And turn life's darkness into day?
Our baby.

CHILDREN IN SAMOA.

Boys Fish with Branches of Trees and Girls Dance with Their Hands.

There was a great war in Samoa a few years ago, and ever since the people when they send about it had to stop and ask where Samoa was. So I suppose that these may be boys and girls, too, who do not know much about Samoa.

It is the name of some beautiful islands in the Pacific ocean. There are all sorts of palm trees and orange trees in Samoa, and wonderful flowers and beautiful birds; but they are coral islands, far away from the mainland, so there are no wild beasts. The largest island is forty-five miles long, and about two hours' sail would take one of the finest playgrounds in the world.

It is a little way out from the busy city of Apia, where live the consuls of other American families, and English and German, too. There is a beautiful green lawn, shaded deep in a smooth beach of cream-white sand on one side, an orange grove on another, a hill covered with a real tropical forest on another, and then the carriage road to Apia on the other.

Unless some of our foreign children come out from the city for the afternoon, you would find only native boys and girls to play with. You would have play enough, even then, for to be a boy or girl in such a beautiful place as one of the Islands of Samoa and not to play, would be impossible. Only the grass mats in the houses differ from those we are used to at home.

If you are a boy you would like to go fishing, and you will find lots of boys ready to go with you; but instead of a pole and line and hook, you need only the branch of a tree.

You must take off your pretty clothes, for little children wear only a strip of cloth wound round the waist and hips, and the way they fish is to go right out into the water. The bay is not deep, and the water is very warm. They each take a branch of a tree, and then form two lines a hundred feet apart. Single file, they go directly out into the water, and gradually turn towards each other, till the boys at each line meet about waist deep, while the boys at the other ends are only a few steps from the shore. Then they all turn about to face the shore, and begin slapping the water with the branches and shouting and laughing and jumping, and walking up to the shore.

They frighten the fish inside the half-circle they have made, and they frighten them more and more till they are driven into water so shallow they cannot swim.

If you are a girl you like to dance, and so do the Samoan girls, but they dance with their hands instead of their feet. They all sit down together and sing and wave their hands and clap, and swing their heads in a way that is very pretty, even if it is not quite like our dancing at home.

The great game for boys and girls together it to build a ship. On the Samoan islands all the natives are good sailors. The children get together and spend days in building a ship. They do the work and the girls make the ropes from vines and bark, and gather flowers for it to sail over. Then when it is finished they have a jolly time playing that they go out to sea.

Soon enough the play becomes real to them, for when they are no more than children they learn about their sailors in earnest.—Warren H. Frych, in Our Little Men and Women.

The Real Davy Crockett.

A man in history and the same man in real life are sometimes as different as fact and fiction. It is thus frequently necessary to refer to him in the terms of our childhood. An old doctor, now in his seventieth year, speaking of Colonel Kentucky pioneer, says: "No man has ever been more grossly caricatured than Davy Crockett. I never saw him dressed in the costume of buckskin shirt and coonskin cap as he is generally represented in our histories. He dressed in a neat, genteel manner, in conformity with the styles of his time. He was of Scotch-Irish descent, and a consistent member of the Presbyterian church. He was a great hunter and a fine shot, and probably a braver or nobler man never lived."

Women Protest Against a Road-House.

The vigorous protests and speeches of a dozen women have prevented the opening of a new road-house in Union county. The place was to be named Long Island, cost $6,000. City attorney Connolly of Elizabeth appeared before the Union county court of common pleas on behalf of the owner, Mrs. Bertha Kohler, and in spite of the spirited remonstrances of the women the court refused to grant the application, and freeholder Benner, who had ordered and let the contract, is breathing lest his application likewise may be denied.

The law and order crusaders made a strong objection against another roadhouse, and the court laid the matter over until to-day.

Remarkable Success of a Grand Feature.

One of the most marked successes of all the financial schemes and enterprises that have been presented and patronized in Plainfield since its existence, is the Hillside Cemetery. Already over 500,000 has been spent by the association in the purchase and improvement of the property, and after the retirement of $6,000 more of bonds for which the money is now in hand, there will be a balance of only $6,000 total indebtedness, all of which is due to the unwearied and financial abilities of Alexander Gilbert and John W. Murray. Moreover it is a leading feature of the city's attractiveness.

A PRAISEWORTHY WORK.

Close of Another Busy Year for the Christian Work Society.

The eleventh annual meeting of the Ladies' Christian Work society of the Trinity Reformed church was celebrated Sunday evening, when interesting reports of the year's work were submitted.

The opening hymn, "How pretty solo was sung by Mr. Bond, superintendent of the Boys' club, in a very effective manner. An address was given by Rev. Dr. A. Davis of Hoosick, N. Y., which was full of praise for the past year's work and encouragement for the future.

The treasurer, Miss E. D. Rolfe, reported a total of nearly $600 received from various sources, and nearly $600 expended in church work and for charitable objects. The society still has a balance in hand of $193.84. It sent to the west a box of goods valued at $137.50, and one to the south worth $70.

The report of the secretary, Mrs. C. F. French, was in full as follows:

We meet to-day on the eleventh anniversary of our band of Christian Work sisters, and it is with pleasure and gratification that we recall the work of the past year.

Our regular meetings, socials, and so well as the sewing meetings, have been well attended, and the interest has been sustained, the sisters together while we were working for others.

We have lost no members by death this year, and only two have withdrawn from the society—so we now have a membership of fifty.

The sewing meetings of the society from themselves monthly, has enabled the chairman of the sewing committee to purchase a large quantity of material, which has been made up at the sewing meetings.

Last November a box of clothing and boots, both articles was prepared and sent to Mr. and Mrs. Hemmingham, the same missionaries for whom we have worked last year, and we now stationed at Grand Rapids, Mich. This box was valued at $137.50, and was packed in it a roll of 36 yards of rag carpet, made and donated by the "Whatsoever Circle" of King's Daughters.

The new method of collecting missionary money and other funds, which was successfully proposed last Fall, has proved a success as our collection far exceeded those of the past years. The amount collected this year, which was now $136.80, which was equally divided between foreign and home work.

Part of the amount for domestic missions was used by a vote of the society, in purchasing a new communion set for the church and a pulpit for another.

During the year four barrels have been sent to the Scholefield colored school, which were valued at $75—for which we have received very kind and appreciative letters.

From the fair, which we held in December, the amount of $275.75 was realized.

Six afternoon teas have been held at the homes of some of the ladies, from which we have realized $30.

We have paid during the year $250 on the parsonage debt and $168.80 interest on the mortgage.

Visiting lists have been distributed at the beginning of each year, so that many of the families in our congregation have been called upon by the visiting committee.

The poor and sick have been cared for, and five families were provided for on Thanksgiving day.

Let us with thankful hearts go on with the work of our Master, and strive for still greater success in the year to be—for we realize all those who are faithful to Him.

A NON-SUIT IN BOTH CASES.

Mary Kiely Must Try Again and in Some Other Way to Recover Damages for Her Broken Hip.

Ever since Jonas Platt about twelve years ago obtained a verdict against the city for the value of his horse which was injured by reason of a defect in the highway of Grant avenue, it has been commonly believed that the city was liable in all cases of injuries resulting from defective streets. Craig A. Marsh, the present corporation counsel, took a different view, and Monday judge VanDyckel of the supreme court agreed with him, and Miss Bertha Mary Kiely, who took the part and the following young women will assist in a series of Greek tableaux—Miss Stewart, Miss Hubbell, Miss Mabie, Miss Simpson, Mrs. Timpson, Mrs. Brooks and Mrs. Mason. The Elizabeth glee club quartette will sing.

After the non-suit was granted in favor of the city, the case proceeded against the other defendant, Jacob Hilmn, the lessee of the property on whose sidewalk the accident happened. Mr. Marsh also represented Mr. Hilmn, and at the close of plaintiff's case moved for a non-suit the plaintiff as to Mr. Hilmn on the ground that a property owner is not liable in damages to the injured party who stumbles in a sidewalk resulting wholly from the operations of nature. This was a new point in New Jersey, and the court, after hearing argument, suggested that Mr. Hilmn put in his evidence and that counsel continue the argument in summing up the case.

Mr. Marsh evidently thought it wise not to let the case go to the jury if he could prevent it, and accordingly moved for a non-suit on another ground. The opposing counsel, he said, had failed to prove that the sidewalk in question was opposite to the property occupied by Mr. Hilmn, and in all possible view of the case this element of proof was indispensable. There was no possible escape from the motion when put on that ground, and the result was that the case was won both by the city and by Mr. Hilmn, and the costs thrown on the plaintiff Miss Kiely.

CRUSHED BY A CAR.

A Plainfield Peddler Badly Hurt by a Fall from the Platform.

Shortly before three o'clock Wednesday afternoon Samuel Goff boarded a downtown street car at the Union station, Elizabeth. He was standing on the front platform as the car proceeded down Broad street. When the car was passing Newberger's store at No. 55, Goff lost his balance in some unaccountable manner and fell off the car and underneath the wheels.

Both wheels of the car passed over his body before the horses could be stopped. Goff, who lives at 100 West Second street, Plainfield, was picked up in a semi-unconscious condition and carried to the hospital. Examination showed that two of his ribs had been broken, and a number of contusions also were found.

ARREST OF A DEAD GIRL'S LOVER

JOSEPHINE HAVER'S FATHER BAKES TERRIBLE ACCUSATIONS.

She Was a Beautiful Young Woman, a Village Favorite, But Is Said to Have Met a Sudden Fate at the Lover's Hands—The Young Man Held for Trial, and His Lamentable Story Revealed.

[SPECIAL TO THE PRESS.]

SOMERVILLE, N. J., May 6.—A great sensation has been caused throughout the village and vicinity of Illman's Cole, a prosperous and popular young farmer, on the charge of having caused the death of the unfortunate Josephine B. Haver, by the administering of an improper drug to shield her from disgrace.

The young man's accuser is Josephine's father, William Haver of North Branch, a prominent ex-freeholder of Hunterdon county.

Josephine was a bright and beautiful young woman, a tall and graceful brunette, with flashing black eyes and glossy black tresses. Young Cole was her accepted lover, and at the death he was deeply affected. The cause of her death, which occurred some weeks ago, was supposed to be from perfectly natural causes, and Coroner Sharrar readily issued a burial certificate. Recently, however, Mr. Haver had his suspicions aroused and made an investigation, which he says he satisfied him that young Cole had guilty knowledge of the cause of the girl's death.

In his complaint Mr. Haver alleges that Cole made use of the drug, for evil purposes, as far back as Oct. 17, 1891.

The warrant issued on the father's complaint was put in the hands of constable Corcoran, who arrested Cole at his home and brought him to Somerville. Cole was admitted to bail in the sum of $1,000, to await the action of the grand jury. He was Miss Haver's lover for a long time. He is a tall, well-built fellow, with a ruddy complexion and sandy mustache.

It is said that when the ball bond was signed the defendant and the girl's father came to with $25 of a money settlement. They could not agree, however, and the young man is to fight the charge.

The illicit medicine is believed to have been purchased from an old negro doctor who lives in the vicinity of North Branch.

The victim was a favorite throughout this locality, and deserved a better fate. The matter will be brought to the notice of the September grand jury, at which time interesting developments may be expected.

SAYS 'TWAS POKEBERRY JUICE.

Old Jake, the Herb Doctor, Is Sure His Prescription Did n't Cause Josephine's Death.

Old Jake Van Nest, the colored herb doctor over the river, is the one supplied the fatal drug with which Simon P. Cole is accused of having killed his sweetheart, Josephine B. Haver of North Branch, as was explained in the Press columns last Friday, lives in a lonely little hut about a mile out of North Branch. When a reporter entered the place yesterday he found the old negro and his wife seated on a bench in one corner of a queer-smelling little room, which was as hot as an oven and littered with bottles and jars of all sizes and kinds, bunches of herbs and roots lying on the table or on the floor, and an old-shaped stove red with heat. There were pots of steaming concoctions. The man himself, a large negro with a smug, thin face, was clothed in a strangely fashioned suit made of rough cloth and decorated by smoke and odors. He was absolutely hairless and it shone like a polished horse chestnut. All sorts of mysterious stories are told about the man. His mother, it is said, a woman who died a few years ago in North Branch at the age of 92, was a medicine man, who studied herbs to cure cows. He, too, is said to have studied herbs, and Jake, who was brought up with him, learned the mysterious properties of herbs.

About fifteen years ago Jake disappeared from North Branch, and for a short spread abroad that he had been seen going off with an old negro witch. He returned only a few years, and when he came back he built his hut and made the most wonderful cures, he says, whenever anybody came to him. Since then he has spent all his time boiling concoctions on his old-shaped stove, searching for herbs as of roots in the fields and woods.

When asked about the drug that he had given to Cole, the old man stood shuffling in a way while he stirred a pot on the stove.

"What was the stuff that you gave him?"

"Pokeberry juice"—he said, with another chuckle—"It would n't hurt a flea. I knew it would n't do any good, but I gave him to put his mind at rest, and just as I've done to lots of other people. Look here!"—he said, pulling back a curtain and taking down a broad-mouthed jar which contained a mass of dried, black-colored berries—"this is what they are. I dry them in the oven and then boil them with Jamaica rum. It's good for rheumatism, but that's all.

"He came to me late one night and said his girl was in trouble and he wanted something for her. I knew it's got something for such people and I would n't give it if I had. I don't believe in poisons, and quinine, and that sort of trash; it's Nature's herbs and roots and barks and berries that I use, and it's only to cure people when they're sick, remember what I'm telling you. But he must have something, and I gave him a dose of pokeberry juice, and he paid me a dollar for it. I've done the same for lots of others, just to quiet their minds. He never came back, and that's the first and last I ever saw of him."

Then the herb doctor branched off to tell about his herb-potions and the herbs and roots gathered in his garden—wild cherry bark, for asthma, in two quarts of water boiled down to one quart, then a pint of Cognac brandy and one-half pound of sugar to make a syrup, a tablespoon dose for adults; golden seal, lady slipper, ragweed, bloodroot, bittersweet, and slippery elm bark.

"My concoctions," he concluded—"if he had had anything the matter with him, and wanted to be cured, remember what I'm saying, I've got things to cure him. But he only wanted quieting in his mind, and I gave him pokeberry juice, because it could n't harm nobody."

NAMED AFTER THE CAMPBELLS.

Beautiful Christening Service by the Rev. Dr. Rudasill at the Upper Cross or Park Avenue.

A novel and picturesque ceremony took place in the open meadow land skirting Park avenue, along the Middlesex county border Tuesday afternoon, when Gypsy Queen Esther Campbell, assisted by Gypsy Ernestine M. Redmond, pastor of the Grace Church Gypsy Mission, baptized the infant daughter of Gypsy Queen Esther.

The Gypsies had been encamped for several weeks on the land of Ellis Campbell, owner of the Middlesex club-house. During the present month a son was born to Esther, wife of Simon H. Cole, and another to Elisha Cooper, whose mother-in-law, the venerable Mrs. Riley, is a famous oracle of the tribe. Mrs. Riley is 70 years old, and in spite of a broken hip is the mother of 22 children, and her latest grandchild, the Cooper boy, is her daughter's tenth. The old woman is the recognized head of the Gypsies of Riley." James Harrison is one of the best-known Gypsies in the country. His family is part of the royal line descended Edwin Evans's daughter, now at the Elizabeth encampment, and she was a cousin to the queen who was buried with such magnificence at Greenwood. One of the heroes of the tribe pressing spiritedly about within their enclosure, the picturesque encampment and vagabond life on the green, the white tents flapping in the breeze and gleaming in the occasional glimpses of sunshine, the knot of curious Gypsy queens and princes in their gaudy costumes, the bright, gay colors of the women's dresses, rich in yellows, scarlets and spangles, the group of spectators, and the solemn ceremony performed by a man. The regular Episcopal ceremony was used, and was followed by a poetic chant of the Gypsies' "Spirit songs". The ceremony took place in the meadow, and the romance of the life of these nomadic people. Even Dr. Redmond was impressed with the singular beauty of their simple customs.

The Campbell family, who are much beloved by the people who have so many times camped on their land, were honored by having the two boys named after them. The names bestowed at the christening were Ellis Campbell Harrison and Edward Campbell Cooper.

AN EVENING OF ROUTINE BUSINESS.

Reward Offered for Robbers, Street Lights Promised for the Outskirts.

In the absence of Mayor Saunders, councilman Hageman presided over the meeting of the borough council last night. The session not began until 8 p.m., and was over at 9:30. The reading of the minutes occupied a quarter of an hour.

A petition for electric lights on Mountain avenue and Orchard street was referred to the committee on lights.

A petition from the Crescent League asking that the electric lights be made a special marshal for the ball grounds was referred to the committee on leagues and marshals.

Chief Boettger and James Stewart were made special marshals at the request of citizens of Rockview, Willow, Washington and Sycamore avenues.

A petition for a crosswalk on Mountain avenue was referred to the street committee.

The bond of H. S. Brokaw as clerk, with N. W. Smalley, J. H. Cooley and H. N. Spender as sureties, was accepted.

The street committee reported that all the streets were in good condition, and well scraped and put in condition; that the water company had restored most of the streets where their pipe lines were laid in good condition, and that the water committee would see that they restored such as had been neglected; that the subscriptions towards macadamizing Manning avenue had all been paid in; that the Harrison street was in a disagreeable and dangerous condition, and it was necessary to take speedy action to put it in proper shape.

Councilman Needham suggested that Brook avenue as an entrance to the borough ought soon to be macadamized.

A petition for 400 yards south of Washington street crossing. A switch has also been put in at Bound Brook. These concessions were made by the Lehigh Valley and the Reading people to run their trains to the New Jersey coast resorts via Perth Amboy without going around by way of Elizabethport, thus saving about three-quarters of an hour in their running time between Bound Brook and Perth Amboy. Local trains on the Lehigh Valley road will probably start from the Central station on the completion of the new track, which will be a great accommodation to the traveling public.

Commodore Rosen Puts Plainfield Lawyers a Step Complement.

Corporation counsel Edward Rosen is having his usual good luck this term of court. He has won all of his cases tried so far, whether before court or jury, or both. When being congratulated Monday he modestly suggested that the reason was that in all the cases which he had tried so far, his opponents had gone out of town to get their lawyers, possibly to New York, Newark, Jersey City and Elizabeth. They were good lawyers, but for a Plainfield case a man ought to have a Plainfield lawyer every time.

Death Ends His Suffering.

Little Willie Hamilton, Three to Many Plainfield People Bereaved, Passes Away.

The sorrow of little people who made so much happiness for afflicted Willie Hamilton during his years of patient suffering will be shared by many. Never was it in less at last from the weariness of his life as an invalid.

Willie lived at Washingtonville. About three years ago he was playing with his sister on a wagon near his home when he fell and injured his spine so that he had been confined to his room ever since. Death came to his release last Thursday.

The pitiful story of little Willie's lonely life and hours of pain was told in these columns with such effect that the tenderhearted and generous young people of Plainfield liberally contributed of their toys and games, and a waged-load, of the same going from house to house. Books and games also were sent, and the kindness of the little readers of THE PRESS was greatly appreciated by the recipient.

Willie was one week over 16 years old. Funeral services were held Saturday. The Rev. Mr. Vanderhoof of New Providence officiated. A large number of friends and former schoolmates of the departed lad gathered about the casket to look upon his face for the last time. An affecting sermon was preached from the text:

"Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these My brethren ye have done it unto Me."

The little people of Plainfield should be happy in the knowledge that they have made cheerful the last years of a little invalid's life.

A FORTUNE FOR MANY HEIRS.

Each Money Bequeathed to Charities, But His Plainfield Relatives Not Forgotten.

The will of the late Daniel Price, of Newark, who died on April 23, at the age of 93 years, was offered for probate Thursday. In addition to bequests to his surviving brothers [he left no lineal descendants], and also to his nephews and nieces, several of whom are residents of this city, he will makes the following bequests:

American Bible Society, $10,000; German Theological Seminary, $10,000; Home for Aged Women, Newark, $10,000; Board Home Missions, Presbyterian Church $5,000; Board Foreign Missions, Presbyterian Church, $5,000; Board Church Erection, Presbyterian Church, $5,000; Board Publication, Presbyterian Church, $5,000; American Tract Society, $5,000; Seaman's Friend Society, $5,000; Liberia College, $5,000; Newark Female Charitable Society, $5,000.

Yet, Mr. Price, in quote from a recent letter, believed in nothing quite so much than posthumous charities". At the memorial service held last Sunday morning in the First Presbyterian church, of which he was a member, it was stated that it was estimated that he had given away, during the latter years of his life, a quarter of a million dollars.

The residuary estate includes his niece, Mrs. L. V. F. Randolph, and his nephew, Theophilus Bond, of East Front street, Plainfield.

BURNT CORK AT THE COUNTRY CLUB.

Delightful Minstrel Entertainment by Local Amateur Artists.

The "Fantasia in Cork" presented at the Casino, Saturday evening, by the Union County Country club, was one of the very best amateur entertainments ever given in Plainfield. Indeed, for amateur minstrelsy it was a surprisingly bright and clever production throughout, and the club members are to be heartily congratulated on the unqualified success of their efforts.

The Casino could not have accommodated a larger audience than which gathered to enjoy the fun of the evening, and did it ever contain one more enthusiastic.

The club had the assistance of but little outside talent, a fact which made the excellence of the entertainment more creditable to its projectors. George D. Phillips made a most excellent interlocutor, and the end men, G. A. Albro, J. F. Harrison, jr., A. F. Comacchio and Fred Kimble, were all that could be desired. The other black faces in the burnt-cork brigade were Elmer B. Runyon, George Schoenmaker, C. E. Brown, George O. Stevens, H. W. Beebe, Fred W. Walz, William Rieger, W. S. Perry, F. C. Hubbell, A. Arrowsmith, H. M. Stockton, and T. B. VanBokerkirk.

The opening part was composed largely of ballad singing, by excellent voices, and interspersed with jests and jokes of much originality and freshness, and all the more relished because of their decided local flavor. Personal frivolities of well-known club members were unmercifully satirized, and the delight of the audience was enhanced by the generous, good-natured spirit in which the jokes were received by those who were made the butt. The music of the first part was as follows: Overture, "Mamma's Wedding Night", by the company; ballad, "Can You Forget the Love Another", W. H. Rieger; comic song, "Tuxedo Park", G. A. Albro; song, "I Fear no Foe", Albert Arrowsmith; comic song, "Next in Town Tuesday", H. W. Kimble; ballad, "Shine, Still Shine", W. H. Rieger; song, "Love Will Conquer All", Albert Arrowsmith. All of the solos were in boracic accord, and the performances were also heartily appreciated.

The first part finale, "Two Mechanical Dolls", was very cleverly rendered by G. D. Phillips and G. A. Albro were presented in perfect imitation of wax or wooden figures, and when wound up went through the most absurd and side-splitting antics.

Part two opened with a neat skating dance by G. D. Phillips, who went through marvelous evolutions in perfect time to the music, gliding about all the time in his winter costume and as though on the sharpest of steel runners on the surface of a frozen lake.

G. A. Albro rendered very successfully the character song, "It Takes a Girl to Do It Every Time", and later gave highly enjoyable banjo and mandolin solos, proving himself a most versatile and delightful entertainer.

A. F. Comacchio, already a favorite in Plainfield, as well as in all other places where his talent has ever shown, won many new admirers and a warmer place than ever in the hearts of his old friends, by his admirable rendering of the "Bell Chorus" performed with perfect ease and unfathomable skill most difficult feats of voice-throwing, and no one was able to detect the slightest motion of the lips while his wooden people were holding their funny dialogues. He proved himself a master of his art.

The evening's jollity concluded with a picturesque production entitled "The Black Crooks"; or, Initiation at the Saturday Afternoon club". In this comedietta clever satire was directed at the "intellectual bash" association, the Monday Afternoon Club, and the audience witnessed the progress of the candidate. "Minnie, Ha, Ha," over the pillowy waves, her experience in the wash-tub whirlpool, her journey over the rocks of the mangle-board. Her final reception in the mouth of the alligator, when she was decorated with a necklace of teeth "swept up after a Monday Afternoon Club banquet. The revolutions and marching choruses of the "Knights of the Mystic Star" were very enjoyable, and the entire affair more of an artistic finish to the evening's performance than a burlesque climax. In the dancing chorus of "Black Crooks" were displayed high capabilities in the art of tripping the light, fantastic toe, and even the heavy-weights did some very clever and difficult high-art work. Mr. Fisk's gyrations were rewarded with a fine bouquet of paper roses, which promptly became a football for some of the agile members of the chorus. The parts in "The Black Crooks" were very capably taken as follows: "Minnie Ha, Ha"—(the daughter of the Regiment), Mr. Brooks; "Sloppy Weather Jones", Mr. Bond; "Cigarette Freddy", Mr. Walz; "Tutti-Frutti Wally", Mr. Moore; "Seventh Regiment Jim", Mr. Rogers; "Common Sense Sailor", Mr. Fisk; "Lucy", Miss Edward Pennyroyal" (Star of the West), Mr. Stockton; "Mosquota George", Mr. Rieger; "Uncle Sam" Hunting", Mr. McElmary; "Sawed Off Tom", Mr. VanBokerck; "Hillside Tennis", Mr. Ivins; "One Dead Horse", Mr. Scott; "Puck in Tights"—(Star of the Ring), Mr. Fisk; "Capt. Kid—Shepard of the Golden Bod", Mr. Wilson.

A delightful feature of the entertainment was the perfection of the orchestral music, which was under the direction of Louis B. Dressler. The efficient stage management and the handsome set of the properties, which were loaned by Mr. Harrigan of Harrigan's theatre, lent a professional and finished air to the performance.

COCKERILL'S LETTER.

Cleveland and Dana and That Celebrated World Interview.

The Reporter and the Ex-President—A Question of Veracity—Why the Statesman's Reputation Suffers—The Interview Was Accepted.

[COPYRIGHT, 1892.]

I have seen of late some rather malicious newspaper paragraphs referring to the somewhat celebrated and alleged interview with ex-President Cleveland published in the World a year and a half ago. I refer to the interview in which Mr. Cleveland was reported as expressing some vitriolic opinions of the editor of the New York Sun, which interview was emphatically repudiated by Mr. Cleveland. The fact that Mr. Cleveland has been and is now a candidate for nomination to the presidency makes a full explanation of the affair rather pertinent. Besides, as I have been somewhat misrepresented in that affair, I propose to place my version of it before the public. When the city editor of the World informed me that one of his reporters had obtained an interview with Mr. Cleveland, in which he had bitterly denounced the editor of the Sun, I was not at all surprised, knowing the personalistency and vulgarity of the long-continued assaults which had been made upon Mr. Cleveland, and naturally considering whether he would ever be goaded to the point of offering some sort of retaliation or defense. I sent for the reporter, and he gave me in substance the subject-matter of his interview with Mr. Cleveland. I questioned him closely as to Mr. Cleveland's mental condition at the time he had his talk with him, and insisted upon having carefully repeated the profanity which it is alleged he made use of in connection. The particular point that I made was as to whether Mr. Cleveland was cognizant at the time that he was being interviewed and had consented to the publication of his personal remarks concerning Mr. Dana. I was assured that not only was aware that he was being interviewed, but that he was rather anxious to have his emphatic opinions laid before the public. My theory was that Mr. Cleveland, goaded to the point of absolute desperation, had made up his mind to resent the hostility of the editor in question, and was absolutely indifferent as to consequences. I had known the reporter in one of a score or more connected with the World, and had known nothing of his discredit. I was assured by the city editor that the World, upon inquiry, had found reason-ably accurate in his work and that any statement he submitted was entitled to credence. It was upon this substantiation that the interview was published, and I may add that I specially directed that certain phrases which the reporter alleged Mr. Cleveland had used should be omitted, because I knew they were really not fit to appear in a newspaper. Naturally the interview created considerable sensation, for the general public it was a revelation of a phase of Mr. Cleveland's character which he had not been heretofore accredited with. It indicated that there was belligerency beneath his stolid exterior; that he was somewhat sensitive to unjust abuse, and that he could present a rough edge when necessary. I think that a great many people who had tried hard to admire him personally were laboring encouraged by his existing of schoolboy pluck.

I was greatly surprised on the afternoon of the day of publication to receive a call from Col. Daniel Lamont. The affable colonel, although not in the secret councils of Mr. Cleveland, has been so long identified with him as secretary, that he was called upon to convey to me the impression that Mr. Cleveland absolutely repudiated this interview. He brought with him a short statement of Mr. Cleveland, and, in his own hand, to that effect. At first I was somewhat indignant when I received that white Mr. Cleveland had perhaps said everything that had been attributed to him, he had not authorized the publication of the interview, and did not, in fact, consent to be interviewed. My natural impulse was to publish a verbatim record of the newspaper and by the reporter who had written the matter complained of. After a moment's reflection, however, that I would investigate the affair and requested him to say to Mr. Cleveland that I would do so. I then sent for the reporter and he reiterated all that he had said, and more emphatically declared his readiness to make affidavit in support of his published account of the interview. Next day I received Mr. Douglas A. Levien, a member of the editorial staff of the paper and an old friend of Mr. Cleveland, to accompany the reporter to Mr. Cleveland's office and to him be questioned touching Cleveland's presence as to the authenticity of the interview. The reporter consented. I was informed by the city editor afterward that they failed to find Mr. Cleveland at his office, and in his house in Madison avenue. To this proposition the reporter showed some reluctance. He accompanied Mr. Levien to his home, which was near Mr. Cleveland's residence, where, after considerable objection, finally agreed to call upon Mr. Cleveland. He contended that to meet Mr. Cleveland under the circumstances would be embarrassing, but he would go as far as the front of the Cleveland residence. While waiting for the doorbell to be answered he suddenly turned away like a craven, refusing to confront the man who had questioned his integrity. This, upon being reported to me, was accepted as evidence of cowardice and guilt, for what honest man ever feared to meet an accuser? I then waited upon Mr. Cleveland, and upon his return that evening assured me that he had received Mr. Levien as a gentleman a pointblank and absolute denial of the bulk of the language attributed to him in the interview published. He also informed me that Mr. Cleveland had said that he had written a letter for the New World to print his denial, and if it did not appear next day he would send to the Associated Press and to the United Press a statement which he drawn up for submission to the country. The case was becoming embarrassing.

Meantime, however, although urged more than once, had not placed in my hands the statement which he had promised to make, and his conduct had not inspired me with confidence. I considered it my duty, therefore, to apply to see Mr. Cleveland himself and ascertain, if possible, the true facts. I requested Mr. Levien to accompany me. By appointment, we called together upon Mr. Cleveland at his house in Madison avenue, about 9 o'clock on the evening. We found him alone in his library, complacent and bland. I never had met Mr. Cleveland before, but I was prepared for him by predicent in 1888 on a matter of principle, and consequently I could not be said that I was a partizan early prejudiced in his favor. I at once took up the matter began to discuss the subject which had brought me to him. He said he had been much annoyed by the interview and publication, and he pointed to a pile of telegrams upon his desk, which he said had been pouring in upon him for three days from all parts of the country, not one of which he had answered as yet. He said that he had implicit confidence that the World would see that justice was done him, and he had patiently waited. But he answered me unless something was done to set him right in the next issue of the paper he would be compelled to send to the country his absolute and unqualified denial of the alleged interview. We were then went over the matter from the beginning, and, while I took no notes, I have a very thorough recollection of all that was said and the manner in which it was said. Mr. Cleveland admitted that he had seen the representatives of the World merely because he had brought him a note from Col. Lamont, introducing him on business of importance, and saying that he was of entirely different mould from the hectoring body politic usually subjected him. (Mr. Cleveland to some indignities while representing the World in Washington. He said that it was his custom at that time to see pers no object to be seen for publication, and that, while he considered the young man as a matter of courtesy, he did not give him the slightest hint that it on. Bridget was upstairs getting breakfast, and there was no one around to whom he could appeal for sympathy but by the side of the largest tub and jumped in with a dreadful splash.

He came down with such a thump on the bottom of the tub, and found the water so chilling, that he quickly scrambled out shivering with cold and crying with a bruise.

Mamma heard the noise and came rushing down in a fright, exclaiming:

"O Harry, what is the matter?"

"I tried to swim in the tub and couldn't," he managed to answer between sobs.

"And a pretty mess you've made for me," said Bridget, casting half-way down the stairs to find out what had happened.

"I just won't be mad," said Harry, with his teeth chattering; "I'll shake a quarter of a dollar out of my bank and give it to you."

"And I'll give you another quarter," said mamma.

So Bridget laughed instead of being mad and made haste to wipe up the wet floor, while mamma rubbed Harry dry, swimmer and got him back into his dry clothes.

As soon as he could stop crying he said to her: "I think you are good not to scold me, mamma—real good."—M. E. Hathaway, in Our Little Ones.

THE COLONEL'S UMBRELLA

There Wasn't a Door in Dunkel's House That Would Take It In.

Jonas Hathaway was said to be the first man who carried an umbrella in the streets of London. Umbrellas were long before that carried by women, but they were considered a feminine luxury, and a man would no more be seen with one than with a fan. He would walk in the streets with a parasol in summer, or carry a muff in winter.

Jonas, however, thinking, like a sensible man, that all the good things should not be appropriated by women, boldly walked off with one which, it was reported only by the laird and the miniature, and were looked upon by the common class of people as a perfect phenomena. To see the minister or the laird go by with an umbrella over his head was as good as a circus to the small boys of the village.

One day Daniel McPherson called upon the laird on my business. He was about to leave, a hard shower came on, and, Daniel being a wicked man, he offered the "respectful," the laird politely offered him the use of an umbrella. Daniel, proud of his position and much elated, walked off with his head held several inches higher than usual.

He had not gone far, however, when to the laird's surprise he saw Daniel posting back with all speed, closing the umbrella still hold firmly over his head.

"Hae, hae, Kornel," he called out, "this'll never do! There's hae a door in a' my house that'll tak' it in! My verra bairn door winnae tak' it in!"

Poor Daniel had not yet grasped the idea that the umbrella must be shut up before he tried to get it in the door.—Harper's Young People.

THE VANISHING KNOT.

This Article Tells You How to Perform a Trick That Is Very Mystifying.

Here is the neatest and simplest trick of all when once it is learned. It is called the vanishing knot, and all that you need to have are patience, skill and a handkerchief to puzzle the keenest of observers.

"You see," explained the doctor, as he twirled a silk handkerchief between his fingers—"it is a fact, although you may not know it—one of the easiest things in the world to learn how to do. For instance, here is one," and he deftly tied a knot in the handkerchief, "Now you see it, and now it is gone," he added, as he airily waved the handkerchief and in an instant as it was at first.

"Here's another, and another. I have a dozen in the handkerchief, but I get away almost as soon as they are tied, and disappear before your eyes. Funny, isn't it?"

And it was funny, and puzzling too. Here is the secret of the trick. Hold the one end of the handkerchief between the first and second fingers of the left hand, with the end protruding from the back as shown in the artist's sketch. It makes no difference how you hold the other end. Tie the knot with the right hand. Tightly grasp the left end of the handkerchief a little below the knot with the second finger and thumb of the left hand, and let go of the right end with first and third fingers. Now pull with the right hand, and the knot slips out. Then instantly, shift the end back between the two fingers and you have it. Besides being the trick, and you are ready for another knot. The catches will amuse the matter plain.—Harper's Young People.

CLEANING OIL PIPES.

An Odd Knife Which Is Compelled to Do Some Queer Work.

To those people of loathing mind who have seen or read of the long pipes that carry crude petroleum from the wells of western Pennsylvania to the refineries of Philadelphia, it is a source of wonder how the pipes are cleaned.

As the oil flows from the wells it is forced through the pipes by powerful engines, a certain distance apart, and as it is forced along it leaves a deposit of sediment on the inside of the pipes. This sediment is composed of a thick, heavy substance, which, if allowed to remain, would soon fill the pipes entirely, thereby stopping the flow of oil.

To prevent this a certain knife is sent through the pipes at regular intervals, and as it is forced along by the pressure of the oil behind it it scrapes off the sediment and carries it along with it. This knife is composed of a number of steel blades, each one of which is a little larger than the one preceding it, and as the knife is forced along it cuts off a little more sediment than the one preceding it, and so on until the last blade has cleaned the pipe to its full diameter.

The knife is then taken out and cleaned in this manner throughout its whole long journey, finally dropping from the pipes in the refinery, and the process of pulling it through the pipes is continued. It is a curious fact that empties continuously into the receiving tanks at the refinery, and is sold for more than a dollar than when it was cast upon the expedition, but otherwise the condition is the same.

It is immediately shipped back to the fields, when it is charged again and sent through the pipes. Under these circumstances require once more its valuable services.—Golden Days.

The Hard-Hearted Apple Woman.

It is rather late to recall anecdotes about the rear of the siege of Paris, but a recent persons, but the following has the merit of being true, if nothing else. A trade load of New England troops was laid over at Philadelphia, en route to Washington, and the usual crowd of deplorables was on hand to "fraternize" with the many other on-lookers was little Jennie Wood and six. Presently the soldiers, assisted by the crowd, began singing patriotic songs, among them one with the refrain, "John Brown's body," three rousing cheers for the soldier boys.

When Jennie returned home she was very thoughtful.

"Just to think, mamma," she said. "Every body cried out to give three cheers for soldiers, but the soldiers boys, and there sat an old apple woman and wouldn't give them her one rocking-chair!"

Her Share.

In one of the smaller towns of Kentucky lives a negro familiarly known as "Tim" White. On one occasion it was necessary to issue a writ for his arrest.

The not unnatural supposition that "Tim" stood for Timothy was met with the flat denial.

"No, sah! My right name is Whatsimorous - souls - we - poor - mortals - be White. Dey jes' calls me Tim for short, sah!"

HOW TO GET A DIVORCE.

States in Which a Decree Can Be Obtained with Ease.

The Varying Terms of Residence Before Suit Can Be Instituted—Ground for Divorce Defined by the Statutes of the Several States.

SINCE it is impossible in many states to get a divorce except for very grave reasons, it becomes necessary for those who seek a longer live together, and to shelter that object the parties must establish a residence in the state in order to be able to bring an action for divorce. This period varies from ninety days for Dakota to five years for Massachusetts. Time in these days often means a great deal of money, and that is why Dakota divorces command so much attention at present, and it is solely for this reason that she has the advantage over a number of other states and territories.

A six months' residence will entitle the plaintiff to sue for a divorce in Arizona, California, Idaho, Nebraska, Nevada, New Mexico, Texas and Wyoming. A large number of the states fix the term at one year. The best of these are Colorado, Illinois, Kansas, Minnesota, Montana, Oregon, Rhode Island, Washington and Wisconsin. Many of the states make the threat that the decree shall be invalid if the plaintiff removes there simply for the purpose of getting a divorce, but the state pays no further attention to him after the decree unless there is a vituperative defendant to follow him up. Even then it is difficult to get positive proof that he or she went there with that as the sole purpose of obtaining a divorce, since there are so many causes constantly coming up which would be sufficient to afford relief. A successful plaintiff may move back because he could not dispose of his estate, if they cannot attend the trial in person.

In Dakota the following reasons are deemed sufficient ground for divorce: Marital infidelity—which will secure absolute divorce in every state and territory except South Carolina, where there is no relief allowed for any reason—excessive cruelty, extreme cruelty, neglect for one year, and habitual intemperance.

This is certainly a pretty good list of fare to choose from, and a person has no business to want a divorce unless some one of these causes can be shown. If the plaintiff starts for Dakota in the spring or early summer, a ninety days' residence will not prove unpleasant.

THE WOMAN'S SIDE OF THE STORY.

THE MAN'S SIDE OF THE STORY.

In the autumn and winter six months elsewhere may offer more attractions. The glorious climate of California is an ardent ally for the defendant and for divorce. A bonafide separation is granted there for one year's willful desertion, neglect, and for habitual intemperance. Extreme cruelty is also a cause, but the others are easier to prove.

The courts of Arizona grant a divorce for six months' intentional abandonment, for cruelty, habitual drunkenness, intemperance and neglect on the part of the husband to provide the necessaries of life for his wife.

In Idaho a plaintiff may secure a divorce for extreme cruelty, desertion, neglect and intemperance, continuing for one year.

In Nebraska the sufficient causes for judicial separation are desertion for two years, habitual drunkenness, extreme cruelty and failure to provide for wife.

Nevada severs the marriage tie for one year's desertion, for gross drunkenness, if constructed since marriage, for extreme cruelty and for a year's neglect on the part of the husband to provide for his wife.

New Mexico dissolves the marital partnership for cruel treatment, abandonment, habitual drunkenness and husband's failure to provide.

The courts of Texas give a divorce for such ill treatment as renders their mind life unbearable and for three years' desertion.

The laws of Wyoming declare a severance of the conjugal relation for one year's willful desertion, for extreme cruelty, habitual drunkenness and husband's neglect to provide for one year and for any treatment by the one which renders the life of the other intolerable.

The above mentioned states and territories exhaust the list of those allowing a plaintiff to commence action after a six months' residence. Of course, when plaintiff's remove to a distant state they always want an absolute divorce, and a limited one, which is a separation from bed and board only. It is well to note that Arizona, California, Idaho, Nevada, New Mexico, Texas and Wyoming never grant a limited divorce. After their decree, the parties may marry again.

Among the states requiring one year's residence on the part of the plaintiff there may be mentioned as the best Washington, Colorado, Montana, Oregon, North and South Dakota, Missouri, Wisconsin and Rhode Island.

Of these, Washington may be regarded as the best, as it is the one requiring along her cousin take of divorce. Sufficient causes are cruel treatment, personal insanity, habitual drunkenness, refusal to provide, and years' abandonment, and any other cause deemed sufficient by the court to warrant a decree. Colorado is another favorite, as it is somewhat cheaper than Washington. Desertion for one year, cruelty, habitual drunkenness, neglect

FREEDOM.

Freedom is the motive power of both national and individual progress. Animated by enlightened intelligence, and guided by prudence, it sets in motion the wheels of enduring prosperity.

To its effective, freedom of action must have practical and untrammeled existence. Regulated of course by just laws, but entirely clear of tyrannical exactions and class distinctions.

We have enough of the same in this country. We want it more in fact.

Freedom for each and every citizen to exercise his own personal abilities, enterprise, industry and labor for his own benefit, unmolested by avaricious opponents of any kind.

Freedom to earn individual wealth, be it great or small, through his own honest efforts, and to securely possess it.

Freedom to enjoy economical home comforts, without being forced to pay monopolistic tribute for the privilege of living.

Freedom to be a freeman in reality, and a victor over all monopolies, combines and class legislation.

These and more spell that all the glorious wording of the American Declaration of Independence means sovereignty—

"We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness."

A PROPER DELEGATE.

It is a matter of importance that the right kind of delegates be selected to the Democratic National Convention at Chicago.

In that connection, Plainfield can present the name of a gentleman whom, we think, would admirably fill the position, It is that of Hon. Joseph W. Yates. He is thoroughly competent, of discriminating judgment, and a lifelong and consistent adherent of the Democratic party. We, therefore, respectfully suggest Mr. Yates as one of the representatives from this Congressional District.

PLAINFIELD REPUBLICAN FOR CLEVELAND

We hope the Independent Vote, Could Not be Polled by Bill Under Any Circumstances.

Col. N. P. T. Finch, of Belvidere Avenue, Netherwood, for ten years editor of the Atlanta Constitution, up to five years ago, private an interview in the Evening Record of that city, in which publicity Mr. Finch was an original tariff reformer. Asked if how York was a Democratic state, he replied:

"Not in the sense that Maryland is. A Democrat can carry New York who can poll the independent vote."

"In 1884, Mr. Hill carried the State repeatedly."

"Mr. Hill ran with Mr. Cleveland under exceptional circumstances. He was to an extent overborne by about 18,000 majority. In what way? Simply because the saloon keepers needed him as a breast water against adverse Republican legislation. He was their friend for that purpose. He worked them for all they were worth."

"Mr. Hill cannot poll the vote of a single independent voter. He never has been able to do so, and probably never will be. He is not built that way. But that is not all. Hill's personal record especially when the fear of Republican state legislation is not suspended over their heads, like the sword of Damocles, he cannot carry the saloon for all they are worth. The German beer sellers will support the Republican nominee, and the remainder of the saloon element will have no use to members of the legislature than to presidential electors. They want a great deal more than Hill will have it in his power to bestow, and all but a few

—The small-pox patient over the brook is not even sick enough to go to bed. He walks around the house like well and is permitted to go out for some time to come.

—Sergeant Lynch says that if the drivers of vehicles on North avenue are not more careful to keep on the proper side of the street and drive slowly, he will be obliged to arrest them.

—Tramps are still a nuisance in the borough. The marshal will arrest all that come in his way or against whom supposed housekeepers make complaint. In this way the nuisance may be abated.

—A number of persons have signed Tom Frame why the Board of Education paves the yards of the public schools with cracked stone for the children to cut their shoes to pieces or pelt one another with.

—A. D. Mathieson can fill a daily benefit want for the people of Plainfield. At his pharmacy, 66 North avenue, a map is on-ulted the directories of the cities of New York, Philadelphia, Newark, Elizabeth, Plainfield, Rahway and way stations.

—Two persons have been badly hurt by falls over dilapidated board walks in the borough during the past week. Those who maintain bad board walks should take warning and remedy defects and avoid suits for damages.

—One of the largest growers of peaches in New Jersey is better to the Weekly House Monitor, Wednesday, says: "The present prospect is that the crop will be a bountiful one and as the season is so far advanced there is little probability of even a partial failure of it."

—The new hotel, The Grenada, on North avenue next to THE PRESS office, is now open for the reception of guests. It is under the efficient management of George and Wallace Miller, young men of wide popularity and large hotel experience in this city. The house will be thoroughly renovated without and within, and entirely refurnished with all the modern improvements, conveniences and comforts that can lend to bring about the satisfaction and gratification of its patrons.

—Henry S. Phillips, the grocer's clerk accused by E. W. Rice & Co. of embezzlement, was a prisoner at Elizabeth over night Monday, because his bondsman did not show up until too late. When he pleaded not guilty he was fixed at $1,500, and court adjourned without his having found a bondsman. In the evening, after all the necessary papers to take bail had gone home, John Thicknesse appeared, ready to furnish security for the required amount. In the absence of the proper persons Phillips was locked up until Tuesday morning, when the bail bond was executed and the prisoner released.

—The hydrants for the Plainfield fire service have been shipped and are on the way to the city. As soon as they arrive and all in working order the entire fire system will be rearranged. The board of engineers will issue a new code of signals, and at ordinary fires only one engine will be called out. Each engine and hose company will have its own territory, and the presence of water in the steam engine company's trahns will be relied on to take the place of steamer pressure. Abundance of strong hose will alone be required. When the new code of signals is ready it will be promptly announced. The box number signals will of course remain the same as now.

—The hearing of the prosecution of Henry S. Phillips, charged with embezzlement of goods and money from his employers, E. W. Rice & Co., in Union county, was held in the police court. He was arrested in Somerset county and held to await the action of the Somerset county grand jury. The indictments were found by the grand jury of Union county. Mr. Rice says that the transferal is none of his doing, but that after the case got into the hands of the police he received a subpœna to appear and give his evidence at Elizabeth. On that testimony the indictments were found. Most of the alleged offenses are said to have been committed in Union county.

TOO FAST FOR A FUNERAL.

Deacon Reed's Narrow Escape from a Runaway Team—Sergeant Lynch's Courage.

One of the most exciting of the many runaways that have occurred on Park avenue was that of Monday afternoon. Shortly after 2 o'clock Henry Reed, a boy who lives midway between Bernardsville and Basking Ridge, was driving under the Park avenue bridge. From the rear of the wagon he was leading a shetland horse. A Royal Blue line train suddenly went thundering overhead. The rear horse plunged and reared, and came crashing down on the rear of the light road wagon. The wagon was upset, and Mr. McMullen and his son were thrown out and thrown violently to the ground. The horses continued on up Park avenue on a furious gallop, probably the fastest speeding ever witnessed on that avenue. The thoroughfare was filled with wagons, and crowded with people who had been watching the bicycle racers so through. How these escaped serious injury seems miraculous. Deacon Charles A. Reed was riding a bicycle serenely up the avenue, the runaways at his back. Suddenly he turned and saw the danger, and only saved himself in the nick of time by steering his wheel up the curb and on to the sidewalk.

Police Sergeant Lynch saw that the runaways were headed straight for the horse-car track people at the corner. At the risk of his own neck he sprang at the near fleet-footed steed in the air, drove back the crowd, and swerved the horses aside from the plate-glass windows of Miss C. B. Clarke's store, and other stores, toward which they were plunging. The horses brought up against the front steps of the First National Bank, tearing away the heavy balustrade. Then the horses were caught and harnessed up to the wagon again, and Mr. McMullen drove the quivering animals away.

The owner of the team had been in town trying to sell the horses to undertakers A. M. Runyon & Son, who decided that the team, though a powerful one, was too fast for funerals.

The annual meeting of the stockholders of the Union Water Company was held Monday, as advertised in THE PRESS, at the office of the company in Cranford, for the election of seven directors to serve for the ensuing year. Owing to the great demand for water pipes at this time of the year the company is not able to obtain them as fast as they can be laid. Officers of the company, however, state that in the course of a few weeks at most they will be able to continue the work more rapidly.

PRESIDENT MURRAY'S REPORT.

Of the forty-two Young Men's Christian associations in New Jersey, three have more members than we, our membership being 370, nine spent more money than we did last year, and expenses of only four of the nine were larger than Plainfield and eight occupy their own buildings, more or less adapted to their work, and yet, one who is thoroughly acquainted with the work of each of these forty-two associations cannot point to one that is in the State. And this notwithstanding the fact that many others of the State are better adapted to association work than ours. This is not saying that we do not need Young Men's Christian association meeting work. For, while we are surrounded with vicious young men, as so many cities are, our world of labor is broad enough and there are hundreds of men in Plainfield to-night who need just the help we can give them. For instance, one night two hundred men, apparently under thirty years of age, were on the streets, all with their hands in their pockets, and on the following Sunday only 175 young men were in five of our churches. For the first time in all my experience I was ashamed of my town. And then appreciate this is shown by the fact that there is daily more than an attendance at our rooms for 6 months of 31. Besides that regular one of the rooms they have been used for special meetings, and for such organizations as the Children's Home Association, the Christian Endeavor Society, the teachers, Choral society, and for the pastors of the city, who have always glad to have the rooms for this way.

If I were asked to say what had constituted more to our success during the past year than any without hesitation four general secretary, J. H. Manning. I wish there were more instrument big enough to measure his work or words rich enough to describe it. And yet however inadequate anything I can say about it may be, we rejoice to know that there is one book good enough to contain the record of it. He has been untiring in his efforts. On one day he takes to a neighboring city a man, a stranger, interested and helps him secure work; another day he is found in the rooms with some one in trouble; another time he guides a man who has been drinking to the rooms, and he had determined on suicide, and in proof of it shows the letter he had written to the chief of police. Then there are days of disappointment, and on another occasion he consorts with a young man who has been in the penitentiary. And again he has been a friend in need to the young men of this city.

During the year, largely through him, forty pieces of temporary and permanent employment have been found for men, and the sick have been visited, strangers have been directed to boarding-houses, letters of introduction have been furnished, and young men entering college have been introduced to the College association. All our work shows the effect of his careful attention.

During the year considerable attention has been paid to our educational work, and A. J. Gaynes, Frank Leland, G. Q. Packer, E. A. Brown, J. C. Whitney, H. E. Hall, J. Mc-Laway, and R. C. Munger have conducted classes in mechanical drawing, book-keeping, the English branches, stenography and vocal music. One hundred and twenty-one different persons have been in these classes and over more than we can pay to the self-sacrificing workers who have given them instruction in the book-keeping class more than half of those who started continued to the end, and those of its members now hold positions for which this class qualified them. Eighty-two per cent of the vocal music graphy class. One of its members, shown his dexterity, and stimulated to better things by the success of his work, entered a business college. At least four of the members are now in the ministry, they could not fail to do so been for this class. And so of the mechanical drawing class, many members of which have got positions with higher wages, by this training. The class in the English branches is for those who have had an imperfect education, and found to meet the needs of them men.

The gymnasium classes, which have been the pattern talks given on Thursday evenings, on such subjects as travel, insurance, money, temperance, etc., have been very helpful. We appreciate the kindness of those who have given our fellows and feel sure that good has been done.

An important department of association effort is the Bible study work. We have been able to do little. We have on hand, however, For a part of the year some of our members have met in a bible class, and we have had one or two outings and some bicycle runs. Before the end of the month we hope to have a class with this, perhaps, we ought to place our resignation, six of which have been held during the year. Once more we desire to acknowledge the debt we owe the ladies who have assisted in this work. The words "Jesus Christ, Son of God and Saviour" are expressed by five Greek words, and the first letter of each of those five words spells the word fish in Greek and Greek characters, in the sentence, spell the word ichthus, which in the Greek word for fish. Hence a fish to the Christians of the first three centuries at once symbolized Christ and their belief in Him. In this way they could make themselves known to each other when it was necessary to conceal themselves, as Christians, from the surrounding Pagans. The fish is found out on the tombs of the first Christians in Roman Catacombs.

The second insinuatory I notice is about "Holy Water." He says it came from "the Greek church in the East," and that the sprinkling of water to symbolize and effect cleansing and purification was instituted by God himself in the Old Law, as anybody can see who will look over the nineteenth chapter of the Book of Numbers in the Bible. There God gave command to Moses and Aaron to prepare "water of aspersion", and told them to put "in a most clean place" the ashes of "the one burned for sin". "And they shall take of the ashes of the burning, and of the sin-offering, and shall pour living water upon them into a vessel." By the sprinkling of this water all "defiled" persons were purified. Of course they defiled." "He that toucheth the corpse of a man, and is therefore unclean seven days, shall be sprinkled with this water, on the third day and on the seventh, and so shall be cleansed." And not only such persons were to be sprinkled with this water, but "the tent, and all the vessels of the furniture, etc. "And a man that is clean shall dip hyssop in it and shall sprinkle therewith all the tent, and all the furniture, and the men that are defiled."—(Num. xix.) In the fifth chapter of the same book we read that in certain circumstances "the priest shall take holy water in an earthen vessel". The use of holy water in the Catholic church comes, then, to us with all that is its favor which we read of in the Old Testament. It still signifies cleansing or purifying as it did in the old law.' Holy water as used in the church at present has been used through all the centuries back to the days of the Apostles, and is mentioned in the "Apostolic Constitutions". Pope Alexander, who died in the year 132, confirmed this Apostolic tradition. He says: "We bless salt and water for the people, that all who may be sprinkled therewith may receive health of body and mind." St. Justin, the martyr, who died in the year 168, says in his Analogy that the faithful in his time were sprinkled with holy water every Sunday in their assemblies. We find it spoken of by St. Cyprian in the third century, by St. Basil in the fourth, by St. Jerome in the fifth, etc.

Right here I think we must not brought into the Christian church from paganism; but, so far from that, it was instituted by God himself in the old law, whence it was brought into the Christian church in its first days, when all agree that the church believed and practiced nothing but the truth.

TRIBUTE TO THE DEPARTED.

Tender Remarks Spoken by a Faithful Pastor Over the Remains of One of Nature's Noblewomen.

Friends and relatives of the late Isabella F. Randolph, the mother of Mrs. Alexander Gilbert, gathered at the old homestead, 80 Madison avenue, Bleecker street, to pay their last and tribute to departed. The beautiful remains of lay reposed in a casket surrounded with beautiful flowers. Upon the lid were grouped wreaths of lilies of the valley, pretty purple violets, and roses, all covered with smilax; and at the foot of the casket was a bank of roses and lilacs, with calla lilies interspersed among them.

The funeral services were very simple and reverent. The faithful pastor of the deceased, the Rev. Dr. D. J. Yerkes, read portions of Scripture and offered prayer appropriate to the occasion. The theme of it all was pure living, trust in God, and unfaltering faith and hope in the life eternal. He told touchingly how the sister now sleeping had only the previous Sabbath been among the worshipers in the meeting of God, and truly fortified in the heaven of her affections call to the Eternal City. The noble qualities of character of the departed were tenderly touched on, and glowing and loving tribute paid to her attributes as a wife and mother. She was a most faithful helpmeet—said the speaker—and the home was a happy residence and cordial affection that made the home where she dwelt such a happiness. Family and such a place of cheer for her friends and acquaintances.

Few words were dry as these tender and true heart-sentiments were expressed, and all felt the grief that the loss of one so estimable a woman brings. The clergyman directed the sorrowing ones to the grave of God for solace of their anguish, and bade all place confidence in the sure leader and Him who is the resurrection and the life.

Where those simple and affecting truths were spoken, prayer was offered by Dr. Yerkes, and those present took a farewell look at the vacant tenement of the beloved soul that had taken its flight. The features were calm and peaceful, and bore a contented look of sweet repose. Within the casket lid was placed a daisy—the spray of a favorite blossom. Love and hope there by one who had felt most closely the tender influence of a life whose mission was to do good to others.

The conditions of the contest were five men to a team, 25 targets each man, five trap rapid-firing system, American shooting rules to govern. In the sweepstake shooting Smith were often 3 strikes. Continuation in the Ministry.

The board of health of North Plainfield, anxious to go rid against small-pox, have passed a resolution asking the school trustees to require the vaccination of all scholars who have not been vaccinated within six years past.

Accordingly the trustees give notice to all scholars and their parents and guardians, that all such scholars should be at once vaccinated.

It is hoped that this will be promptly done, and that the trustees will not feel it their duty to enforce the law which authorizes them to forbid unvaccinated scholars from attending school.

For the records of the trustees, parents are requested to fill out and send to the principal, blanks that have been handed out for the same at the time when their child, or children, last received vaccination.

AN EXPENSIVE TENANT.

Strange Experience of Mr. Walkover, a Gotham Landlord.

He Asks for Sixty Dollars and Instead Gets a Lot of Valuable Historical Information—A Costly Experiment and Its Startling Results.

[Special New York Letter.]

AMSHAKES. PLEASE is a would-be author and dramatist by the Harlem and writes sensational stories for the newspapers and magazines. Like most of letters, Sam is poor, but he never allows this circumstance to disturb him in the least. He manages to get enough to eat, such as it is, and his time is so absorbed by his literary labors that he has no opportunity to complain, if he were disposed to do so, which he is not, for he is an optimist and a philosopher. A few evenings ago, while engaged on a novel for a New York literary paper, there came a violent knock at the door.

"Come in," said Sam, placidly. Mr. Walkover, the landlord, entered. He held a folded paper in his hand.

"Here is a bill for your rent. I would like to have it paid immediately, Mr. Shakespeare. I've been waiting for you to pay for some time."

"Is it really possible, Mr. Walkover, that you expect me to pay actual cash?"

"Well, that is just what I do expect. It's three months since you have paid a cent of rent, and I am tired of the way you are doing."

"So it is three months since I paid you any rent? Great Scott! how the time flies. No wonder the ancient Romans said Tempus Fugit. It does fugit like the mischief."

"Yes, time passes, and no money passes between us."

"That's so," replied Safa. "If you have paid me any money during the last three months it has escaped my memory. Yes, the last three months have been fraught with disaster to me."

"Yes, they have been very sad to me," said Walkover. "I've not been able to collect my rents from much."

"Yes, Mr. Walkover," said Sam. "The events of the last three months have been sad for every man's feeling, no matter where or who he may be. It makes me sick at heart to think of the dreadful famine in Russia. How those poor people must have suffered, and—"

Mr. Walkover yawned and looked bored.

"There, there, Sam," he said, placidly. "There is the arrest of Deeming in Australia who is supposed to be 'Jack the Ripper.' Just think, Mr. Walkover, of that man murdering women and children by the score. Although he did not kill them all during the last three months, it is very sad nevertheless. We have had the grip and outbreaks of typhus fever right here in New York. You are right, Mr. Walkover: the last three months have been very fraught with disaster to the country and in New York in particular, which is the great metropolis."

"Well, that's none of our business. You and I are not responsible for the grip, or the typhus fever. Nor are we responsible for the unpaid rent of these apartments," said Walkover, indignantly.

"I am surprised, Mr. Walkover, to hear you speak in such a frivolous manner of the typhus fever and grip, enthralling such untold misfortunes on the human race."

"That's bosh. Will you pay me my sixty dollars?"

"Is it possible that I owe you that much?"

"Yes, thanks to my weakness, you have got into me that much."

"For God's sake, Mr. Walkover, don't call your noble-hearted generosity weakness."

"I want my money; sixty dollars are not to be found on the street every day."

"Yes, I ought to be able to corroborate that statement. You are quit right when you complain of the panicky condition of the money market, and put the finances of the country ought to be in a sound condition. The silver question more—"

"YES, TIME DOES FUGIT LIKE THE MISCHIEF."

"Do you think it is fun for me to do without money all the time?" exclaimed the exasperated landlord, who was getting warm.

"The wise man, Mr. Walkover—"

"Hang the wise! Interrupted Walkover.

"How much disappointment and dark suffer by tugging this decision to their bosoms. The really wise man learns to deny himself. I will illustrate my example and learn to deny yourself."

"Deny myself what?" gasped Walkover.

"The sixty dollars that you are not going to get from me."

"Alright, Shakespeare. I'll strike off the sixty dollars you owe. I'll make you a present of it," exclaimed the landlord, who realized the futility of his possession proceedings.

"Are you in earnest?"

"Yes, I'll actually give a present of the sixty dollars, if—"

"Ah, there is an if about it. I thought there was a string attached to it."

"Yes, I will cancel your debt if you will go out at once."

"More so," exclaimed Sam; very much amazed. "Why in the world should we part, Mr. Walkover? We have always got along very well together, never mind any complaints about the rooms or the price of rents. Why should it not be so in the future, who have been so kind and considerate?"

"Well, that's check," ejaculated Walkover.

"It is true," continued Sam, "that the house is very much in need of repairs, but that is nothing to me, since it should be. I'm afraid it is not sanitary plumbing, and that there is more or less malaria about the premises. Some of the neighbors are objecting. Now, for the sake of peace for me so much consideration that I prefer to remain with you."

"All that is gall. Look here, Mr. Shakespeare, I will cheerfully lose the rent you owe me just to get rid of you."

"That's very flattering to me. What you say encourages me to ask you for the loan of twenty dollars."

"Are you crazy?"

"No, but on reflection I've come to the conclusion to move to more fashionable apartments, and I need ready dollars to pay the expenses of moving. It costs money to move. You have to pay for furniture and I always go up that liberally who move my things."

"You say I will have to pay to move you?" asked the astonished Walkover.

"Why, of course. You don't expect me to do it, do you, particularly as I have not got a cent."

The landlord sat down, and looked thoughtfully at the ceiling for a moment. He knew by sad experience how expensive moving is. It was getting a tenant out of it whose rent was in arrears. At last he said:

"I owe you twenty dollars. Now you get out of here and I'll call it square."

Within two hours Sam Shakespeare had moved.

Mr. Walkover owns a number of houses in Harlem, and a few days afterwards he noticed that the sign of "To let" on a house near Gen. Grant's tomb was gone. He went to his agent, whose office was close at hand.

"Have you rented that house on Manhattan avenue?" he asked.

"Yes," said the agent. "I've got a nice, quiet tenant, a literary gentleman, he moved in two days ago."

"Literary gentleman, eh? I believe he is connected with the press."

"What is the name of the scribbler?" asked Mr. Walkover, who was beginning to entertain a horrible suspicion.

"He has a strange sort of name. Sam Shakespeare, I believe it is."

It took that wretched landlord several weeks' time and thirty-five dollars in actual cash to persuade Sam to move again.

ALEX E. SWEET.

He Was Consolable.

In the course of a recent charming paper on Lowell before a woman's club Miss Susan Hayes Ward told the story of the poet essayist which, to her knowledge, had not been in print. It was in reference to Mr. Lowell's second marriage. At the time when rumors of the event became current among his friends one of them, a student, asked permission of the first Mrs. Lowell and a firm believer in her husband's permanent widowhood, took it upon herself to deny the gossip every time it met her. Finally, however, the announcement came to her from such extraordinary good authority that her faith was shaken. She wrote frankly to Mr. Lowell that she had heard the reports and persistently denied them, but now began to doubt her self-trust. She begged him to let her know the true state of affairs, whether she was to believe him a never-to-be-consoled husband, or, after all, "just like any other man."

The answer was prompt and brief:

"Dear Madam: Yours, like any other man."—N. Y. Times.

About the Complexion.

No sort of food is better for the complexion than the common potato. The finest complexions in the world are those of the Italian and Spanish ladies, who live largely on these vegetables and fruit like the orange or banana. It is said that the fact is becoming appreciated in the east, and that some New York ladies, to acquire and preserve a good complexion, are living almost entirely on oranges. Half a dozen for breakfast with a cup of coffee, a dozen for lunch with a glass of milk and a saucer of potatoes, and a dozen more for supper with a crust of bread and a sip of tea may not be high living in the proper sense of the word, but such a course of diet will bring a complexion of peach and ivory which will drive almost any belle out of her head with envy.

JAPANESE FIREMEN.

How They Fight Fires in the Land of the Mikado.

Plenty of Pluck and Enthusiasm Displayed, But No Common Sense—An Engineer's Experience in Tokio.

Of the many enemies in nature the Japanese have to fear, including earthquakes and typhoons, plagues and volcanic eruptions, fire is the most dreaded. Against it they are ever on the watch and guard, and yet they suffer more and oftener from its ravages than from any other cause. Most of the buildings throughout all the country, with some exceptions in the city of Tokio, are built of wood, or of bamboo and paper, and thatched with dried grass, or shingled, are exceedingly light and inflammable, and offer great opportunity for the outbreak of fire and no protection whatever against it. In very frequently whole villages and towns are swept away and completely destroyed by fire in a single day.

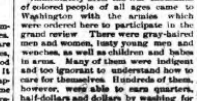
In Tokio and other cities, and in fact in all towns of any size, are tall watch towers, where a man is constantly on the lookout to discover the first signs of fire. The towers in Tokio have been erected in localities deemed most favorable, and they were instituted there as far back as 1635. They are simply immense lookout offices of great height, with a bell at the top and a place for the watchman under the roof. By a code of taps on the bell the watchman can indicate the part of the city in which the fire is, and the size of it. An alarm is sounded from one tower all the others take it up and continue to announce the locality and progress of the fire. The system is very like our own fire bell system. Fire watchmen patrol the streets during the night, one on the left hand and in the right an iron staff with a bunch of rings at the top. As he walks he strikes the staff on the end of the ground and calls out: "Look out for fire."

In Temple Bar a writer gives an interesting description of how Japanese firemen fought a fire in the town where he was sojourning. He turned out to the guard of the fire brigade. The brigade was equipped with "only three fire engines," he says, "and in had the assistance of a hook and ladder company. The engines were small, and were drawn by a call. When the alarm was heard from one of the fire lookouts the men at the station house hammered loudly on the bell, the men turned out, the officers hustled into their uniforms, jumped on their horses and started for the fire in short order. The captain armed himself with a huge whip of horsehair, a kind of substitute for a speaking trumpet, and the lieutenant waved a long spear from which hung a bunch of tassels, the badge of the brigade. The brigade harnessed itself to the engines and the procession started, officers first and visitors bringing up the rear.

When the brigade reached the fire half a dozen men had been there first and others were going up like paper lanterns. Hundreds of people were rushing wildly around, trying to save their household goods and there was the usual panic, only greatly intensified. Then the engines arrived and near to every inhabitant. The engines had a little of water, but they did little good. The hook and ladder company worked like monkeys, carrying about them boxes of ointment and dressing for the burning houses with the greatest pluck. They worked well, too, but they were only at it about ten minutes, when the fire was out, and the men, who they could hardly get from house to house to work, were off to the next fire.



A STREET SCENE IN THE REGRO VILLAGE

The captain and lieutenant were their barristers and defended them if they were charged with fighting a fire. The writer says one American engine company would have put out the fire, or engaged in pumping in an hour. Dozens and dozens of houses were burning like paper.

The writer remained stated 2 in longer, and they suggested to the captain that in turn the work of the hook and ladder company in a group of smoking houses in the direct path of the fire, and try to make a gap that the fire could not cross. The captain looked on with amusement and ordered them back. But after a few more houses had gone up he took their advice. The people were aghast at the brigade's leaving the fire and tearing down unscorched houses, and there were strong protests. But a number of the houses were torn down and the course of the fire was stopped.

Horse Running Forty Miles an Hour.

Few horses have made a mile dash in less than 1:46; Salvator, in 1890, made it in 1:35¾, which is something truly wonderful. Let us analyze these figures. To begin with, it is nearly forty miles an hour—a speed averaged by few railway trains. There are 5,280 feet in a mile, so that for every one of the ninety (to 90) seconds he was in making that mile he had to get over fifty-five and three-tenths feet of ground. Just think of the wonderful speed he was moving at—a half a hundred feet for each beat of a man's pulse!

A QUAINT COMMUNITY.

A Village Where Ignorance and Filth Predominate.

History of the Freedmen's Settlement at the Outskirts of the National Cemetery—Four Wretches Who Deserve Sympathy and Pity.

[Special Washington Letter.]

Adjoining the celebrated Arlington estate, a portion of which is set aside for the magnificent National cemetery, is a village where ignorance, squalor, filth and famine predominate.

Immediately after the war thousands of colored people of all ages came to Washington with the armies which were ordered here to participate in the grand review. Thousands of them stayed and women, lusty young men and wenches, as well as children and babies in arms. Many of them were indigent and too ignorant to understand how to care for themselves. Hundreds of them, however, were taken in hand and given half-dollars and dollars by washing for the officers and assisting the cavalrymen in caring for their horses, while the boys gathered a great many dollars for holding the bridles of the horses of both officers and men. Those of them who were employed by the day, at from $50 and usually two or more families purchased a house. They were very pretty little cottages of white, but are now ramshackly and rickety, as well as dirty and disease breeding. There are also remnants of the comfortable little homes which were erected before the war by the Lees for their slaves. But these, too, are reminiscences. The village is built on either side of a single street just on the brow of the wooded clothed heights, and may be seen from the river front on this side of the Potomac, 300 feet below, where the town is to our backs, while it shines upon the hilltop and gives unto this peculiar appearance of immunity to the smells and indiscriminating good-night kisses. The single street is a sort of cosmopolitan front yard to the village. It is always cumbered with the heavy rumbling vehicles of trade, but is usually covered with clothes lines, upon which the people are emblems indicative of the use of soap and water upon neither garments and garments which are typical with the ravelings of time and ordinary wear or use are strung out to dry. Over a pair of drawers upon these of the clothes lines which would never prevent their wearers from being overexposed, while sitting upon damp ground or cold stones. There were stockings as heelless and soleless as Achilles, and as nearly shoeless and stockingless as Diogenes. There were shirts and chemises which no amount of thread, handled by the most dexterous fingers in the world, could ever be made fit to wear on the civilized side of the river. The endeavor, however, of the colored people to be clean and to clean was the only thing worthy of commendation which I observed.

Sandy D. Pat.

Not Really Distressed.

It takes a great deal to disturb the even tenor of certain well-ordered and serene minds, in illustration of which the following incident is cited. An old lady living in a certain New England village was going down a flight of back stairs when she fell, and rolled from the very top to the bottom of the stairs, where she burst open the door and came rolling out into the kitchen. Her servant girl, Jane, screamed in affright, and various members of the family came running into the kitchen, breathless with alarm. Before any of them could speak a word the old lady lifted herself to a sitting position on the floor and, with her fingers on her nose, and sniffing at the air, said calmly: "Jane, there is his ring in the room. Is burning and I know it!"—Wide Awake.

THREE BRIGHT WOMEN.

Now Connected with the World's Columbian Exposition.

Mrs. Bailey and Her Work in the Director General's Office—Charming Miss Loughborough—Miss Newton Employed by Miss Eggerding.

[Special Chicago Letter.]

Great events in the world's history bring into prominence women who have inventions of a quiet, inconspicuous, but perhaps unconscious of exceptional talent, contented in a narrow sphere, to be cherished and loved.

The war of the rebellion wrecked many beautiful southern homes, and from their ashes went out tenderly nurtured women whose patrician hands, unaccustomed to toil, were obliged to learn the secret of work for daily sustenance. The world's fate has been and will be open and kind, for women, bringing into notice and recognition many never before known beyond their own hearthstone.

Mrs. Margaret H. Bailey, who by the fortunes of war has been compelled to fight the battle of life for herself, was born in Tallahassee, Fla., the only daughter of the distinguished lawyer, Hon. Robert S. Hayward, partner of Gov. David S. Walker; when but seventeen years of age she was married to Capt. Abram Z. Bailey, son of Gen. William Bailey. At nineteen she was left a widow, and being a lady of rare culture and literary ability she went to Washington, D. C., where her unusual loveliness of person, tact and ability won immediate recognition. In the past twelve years she has been engaged in literary and clerical work. She was married to Capt

THE NATIONAL DEMOCRATIC CONVENTION.

The National Democratic Committee, at a meeting held in the city of Washington, D. C., has appointed Tuesday, the 21st day of June, 1892, as the time, and chosen the City of Chicago as the place for holding the national Democratic convention. Each State is entitled to a representation therein equal to double the number of the representation to which it is entitled in the next electoral college, and each territory and the District of Columbia shall have two delegates. All Democratic conservative citizens of the United States, irrespective of past political associations and differences, who can unite with us in the effort for pure, economical and constitutional government, are cordially invited to join us in sending delegates to the convention.

CALVIN S. BRICE, Chairman.
SIMON P. SHERRIS, Secretary.

THE ISSUE OF THE DAY.

The purpose of a Government like that of the United States is clearly set forth in the preamble to the Constitution, which reads:

"To establish justice, insure domestic tranquility, provide for the common defence, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty."

Those are the definite and all important objects for the securement of which the Constitution was established.

The political history of the country attests that the party of Democracy has ever fearlessly striven, regardless of opposition, to protect and perpetuate those ordained requirements.

In doing that, the Democratic party has met hostile demonstrations such as no other political organization ever encountered.

Yet it lives to-day an unconquered power, and living, battles with undiminished zeal for the blessings of liberty.

To promote the general welfare is an obligation of the Constitution, and has become a vital issue.

THE GENERAL WELFARE MEANS THE WELFARE OF ALL THE PEOPLE, not the special benefit of any class, not the enrichment of a few at the expense of the many.

To defend the general welfare against monopolistic greed of every name and kind is now a political necessity.

It is the issue of the day.

An issue championed by the party of the people, bearing the time-honored designation of Democracy.

"GOOD BYE, SWEETHEART, GOOD BYE."

The transfer of Bayonne from the seventh to the eighth Congressional district puts our city fewer miles from its son county, in one sense, and anchors it with Union and the Oranges. New company, 'tis true, where we shall find few familiar faces, and where new plans and programs will be formed; new ties where our city may or may not stand some sort of "show" in "having something to say." Possibly not. Already Union county and the Oranges have several candidates for Congress; also for elector; also for delegates and alternates to the Chicago convention. Possibly an alternate may be conceded to Bayonne; but the delegate will be sure to go and the "alternate" can alternate his position by standing on one foot and then on the other, waiting for a chance to step in where his presence may amount to something!

Dear old Hudson! How strange it will seem to be "repatriated" (so to speak), even for one convention, where Bayonne cannot fraternize with J. C. Hoboken and the county towns! Like Brignoli once sweetly sang, as our city delegation crosses the long bridge to first visit Elizabeth (and Union) instead of enjoying the shady precincts of Grove street, the chorus will be: "Good bye, Sweethearts, good bye!" and from the Five Corners and the Mass, and the Will there will be refrain: "Ever of thee I'm fondly dreaming." We trust, however, so far as our city is concerned that our delegates may be the first trip to the District Convention a fare way (Railway) to recognition.—Bayonne Herald.

THE NEXT UNITED STATES SENATOR.

The election of a United States Senator by the next New Jersey Legislature may decide the political complexion of United States Senate in 1893, and unless the State turns itself upside down this fall a Legislature will be chosen to elect a Democratic Senator.

The Legislature this year had a Democratic majority of 30 on joint ballot, the Senate standing 16 Democrats to 5 Republicans, and the House 42 Democrats to 18 Republicans.

Of the Senators holding over entire this year four are Republicans and three Democrats. If all the newly elected Senators are Republicans there will still be a Democratic majority of two in the Senate. As, however, Hudson, Bergen, Mercer and Morris are all likely to elect Democratic candidates, the probability is that the Republican representation in the Senate will be reduced instead of increased.

With the election of an entirely new House of Assembly the Republicans would perhaps have some show of a majority in joint meeting for United States Senator if there was not the large Democratic majority in the Senate to overcome. With the Senate standing as at present they will have to elect thirty-six Assemblymen to get a majority of one in the joint meeting.

That is to say, they must elect twice as many members as they did last fall. In the extremely unlikely event of the election of seven Republican Senators in November they would still be obliged to elect thirty-three Assemblymen to control the joint meeting.

It is not in the wood. The forlorn hope of electing a Republican Legislature this fall to choose a United States Senator may as well be dismissed for good. The next Senator will be a Democrat, and, in fact, it is upon the presumption of this patent fact that all the Senatorial talk by Republican newspapers is based. Their only definite ideas in connection with the United States Senatorship is that the Democratic majority will repeat the experience of 1887. In this the wish is father to the thought.

A tin plate factory is to be started at Elizabethport. It ought to be in operation before the Presidential campaign opens, to turn out tin plate badges for Republican campaigners in New Jersey. This is going to be a tin plate campaign.

—The stockholders of the Ford Machine Tool company will hold their annual meeting and election of directors, Monday afternoon, June 6, at 3.

AN OVERPLUS OF PLAINFIELD FEMALES.

But Then, Although Outstripped, What Now in the Whole City World Upon One of the Entire 700 Acres?

The census blue book already been published in Ten Pages from the recent census bulletin, there are other figures and features of interest, and a table given below that calls for some of the weaker sex this city outnumber the stronger by 770.

New York has 44,097 more females than males; Pennsylvania has more males by 74,068, and the District of Columbia is in the majority by 3,295. The number of males in these States has increased during the last decade 1,163,164, or 28.34 per cent.; the number of females during the same period 1,041,778, or 19.67. Since 1850 the males have increased 2,988,658, or 113.46 per cent., and the female population has increased 2,419,412, or 117.21 per cent.

The census indicates that the large cities generally have more women than men, but Jersey City is a striking exception, and is the only large city given above the age of 10 years.

In 1850, with a total population of 489,555, New Jersey had 245,346 males and 244,209 females. In 1860 the female population had increased to 326,406, and the male to 395,051. Ten years later, which includes the period of the civil war, the females had increased to 426,261, while the male population was only 443,672. In the next decade the males increased 24.52 per cent., and the females 26.16. During the eighteen years' change in the ratio of the male population, which increased 160,697, and the females 166,920, making the total male population in 1890, 790,819, and the female 774,181. According to these figures there are now in New Jersey 3,295 more women than men. Trenton has 716 more males than females.

The following table gives the population, by sexes, in the cities in this State:

	Total Population	Males	Females
Atlantic City	13,055	6,709	6,346

The total native population of New Jersey is 1,115,958; foreign, 328,975. The colored population is 48,353. The natives of foreign parentage, 397,986.

TWO OLD TORTOISES.

Specimens Discovered at Wakefield Which Were Hatched Many Years Ago.

It is not to be taken for granted that "C. C. 1492," or "G. W., 1750", cut in deep letters on the upper roof or the lower basement of a tortoise means that Christopher Columbus or George Washington did with their respective jackknives incise their initials with the dates on the obnoxious reptiles. The finding of said tortoises, couters and gophers, with brands, chronological or otherwise, is of common occurrence and often noted. The trouble in a discovery of this kind is its verification. A Catodo virginea may stalk around and be a wretched forgery. The myth of the decoration of box tortoises is so constantly recurring as to be received with well-deserved skepticism.

Here, however, are two cases of tortoises which, when started years ago, have been found to-day by the person who cut the letters and the dates on them.

Last week N. B. Day of Wakefield came across a tortoise. Taking it up, he saw cut in the shell his initials, "N. B. D., 1865". Mr. Day does not question for a moment that he had cut deeply the creature when he was a lad, some thirty-seven years ago. It had been his habit to cut his initials, with the year, on all the land tortoises he found, and so to give them their liberty. The marks were fairly visible, and had the same worn appearance as the old. Orange is not near made on it with a knife. The tortoise was not large, and so Mr. Day thinks growth had been but small.

Naturally, information was sent the gentleman of a tortoise found at Madison, marked "N. B. D.," with the date 1864. Mr. Day was asked as to whether he had marked this tortoise. His reply was that his habit of marking tortoises had begun a half century ago, and that as a little boy he had lived in Madison, and that he had unquestionably already had this tortoise.

The lesson in natural history is worthy of notice. First, it gives some idea of the longevity of the chelonians, and, secondly, their liking to remain in a certain fixed locality.

NEW ORGAN FOR THE MISSION.

Acceptable Birthday Gift from the Young People to the Chapel.

The fourth anniversary of the Warren Mission Christian Endeavor society was appropriately celebrated in the chapel Wednesday night. The audience was large, and highly enjoyed the exercises.

Reports of the various committees were read by Fred Walker for the secretary, Miss Lizzie W. Stafford. They showed a flourishing state of affairs.

The music of the evening was very fine. It was furnished by an excellent choir of 16 voices, and by Prof. Hudson's orchestra: Mr. and Mrs. F. A. Pollock, D. E. Davis, Joseph Moore, J. E. S. Petrie, Andrew Carpenter, Dowitt Clinton and Joseph Salditt. Then there was a a fine new organ, presented by the society to the chapel. M. M. Dunham made the presentation speech, to which Frederick Moon aidy responded. The address was by the Rev. A. I. Marthe of Dunellen, on "Christian Consecration", and was quite interesting.

A particularly enjoyable musical selection was the trio, piano, violin and flute, by Mrs. and Mr. Pollock and Mr. Petrie.

Miss Maggie Shepard, organist, was presented with a fine testimonial album by the society.

The decorations of the chapel were very lavish and pretty.

W. S. DARLING SAID TO BE DEAD.

Ill Health Reported Since Him in the Month of May.

W. S. Darling of the bankrupt firm of J. F. Plummer & Co., all well-known Plainfielders, which collapsed in 1889, leaving creditors to the extent of several thousand dollars, who is said to have been in Montreal since March last under the name of W. S. Hilton, is said to have died at the Windsor Hotel in Montreal Sunday. His death is said to have been caused by the bursting of a blood vessel on the previous day. His wife and family have gone on to Montreal to verify the report and make arrangements for the funeral. The guests of the hotel and others who knew Darling heard speak of him as a man whom they could not too highly esteem.

About three days ago Mr. Darling's physician warned him that he was suffering from enlargement of the heart, which might soon prove fatal. This caused him to apply to a Masonic friend for assistance in settling his affairs before end after death. "He told me"—said this man—"that he was not now a Mason, but that he had been one. And, acting on the dictum, 'once a Mason always a Mason', I gave him all the assistance in my power."

Darling was very reticent about his affairs at Montreal, and stoutly denied his identity till he was forced to admit it. It is learned that a few months ago he made overtures for a settlement of the claims against him, but no compromise was effected at His wife, it was supposed, was to furnish the money.

The New York Evening Sun of Monday commends on the death as follows:

There was no end of gossip in dry goods trade circles this morning over the news of the death in Montreal of W. S. Darling. Mr. Darling who was the firm of John F. Plummer & Co. of this city two years ago. Darling died yesterday. Death was caused by the bursting of a blood vessel due to an enlargement of the heart, from which he had suffered some time.

The dead man was the confidential manager of the Wholesale dry goods firm of John F. Plummer & Co. He got away with about $500,000 of the firm's money. His shortage was discovered in July, 1890, and resulted in the failure of the firm.

Darling fled to Canada, and for a time lived at the Windsor Hotel in Montreal under the name of Charles D. Hilton. His wife remained in this city, but visited her husband frequently. Darling kept very quiet and took no part in the social neighborhood a few months after he went to Montreal.

His health began to fail several months ago and the physicians warned him that his illness might prove fatal at any time. Darling was a Mason and confided his secret to a brother Mason in Montreal.

The failure of the firm of Plummer & Co., and the flight of Darling, caused quite a sensation in trade and financial circles at the time. Darling, as manager of the business, had assured Mr. Plummer that the firm was clearing $150,000 a year. One of the mills, which was the property of the firm to the amount of $400,000, caused an investigation of the books, and instead of a balance of $600,000, as Darling had represented, a shortage of that amount was discovered. It was never accertained what became of the money.

A brother-in-law of the dead man are now in Montreal, and will bring his body here for burial.

An Awesome Beauty and a Parisian Wife.

There has been issued from the press of the Worthington company, the well-known publishers, of 747 Broadway, New York, a most sumptuous and interesting volume, entitled "Flirt". This is a fascinating tale of Parisian life, from the pen of the famous writer, Paul Bervieu. Translated from the French by Hugh Craig. The volume is a delightful one, and is a work of art as well, being printed on fine paper and nicely bound in illuminated cover of cloth, and is enriched Beautiful illustrations abound, from the master brush of Madeleine Lemaire, fac similes of these in the genuine French edition. The "flirt" is a most bewitching girl, an American heiress who wedded a Parisian noble, and the tale of her adventures and romantic career in the gay French capital is a fascination from beginning to end. The only regret the reader has is that there is not more of it, when he has reached the end. The volume is the ideal summer novel, and will make an idle day pass most pleasantly.

It Will Not Work With Us Either.

Of late certain New York advertising agencies, having noticed that items of Newark and other cities have been advertising in the papers of the State lying within their trade limits, have sought to secure such advertising for them to do their advertising for them. The well-known Red Hive store of Plaut & Co., Newark, advertised for a long time with the ERA, but we have this week received notification from Mr. Rowell & Co., of this city, that they will handle the advertising for that house after June 1st, accompanied by an offer to secure the same space in the ERA for a year, which is but little more than half our regular rates, heretofore paid. We have promptly declined their offer, as we do all offers for cut rates, and we hope that the other newspapers of the standing and good circulation in New Jersey will do likewise. A newspaper that will accept such a proposal does itself and its patrons to have their circulation misrepresented, and to encourage a system without justification to a scheme like this to obtain patronage. If the newspapers of standing and circulation would resent it, these advertising agencies would not seek to make many commissions out of the business, and papers would obtain only secured, and the advertisers would soon realize that they got more than cash for their money in which advertising is valuable, we shall look with interest to see what papers in this part of the State accept the reduced rates offered by Geo. P. Rowell & Co.—Bound Brook Ere.

The Plainfield CONSTITUTIONALIST had the same experience with Rowell & Co. and also declined the offer.

Cleveland, Both Candidates and Platform.

At the Bridge-water township primary at the court house in Somerville, Friday, five Cleveland delegates to the State convention—Trenton were elected. The delegates are Jacob Klotz, J. Doughty, jr., and David R. Hodge of Somerville; Garret Bergen, Bound Brook; James J. Scholler, Bound Brook. James J. Bergen presided.

Resolutions were adopted instructing the delegates to vote as a unit. Trenton Cleveland delegates, "the Democratic voters of the township of Bridgewater in primary meeting assembled heartily indorse the platform and the Democracy of the State, and cordial administration of Grover Cleveland, and hereby to him as the only candidate who is both Democratic and platform."

FRIENDS' YEARLY MEETING.

Plainfield Quakers Join in Opposition to Liquor at the Water's Edge.

The committee on the general state of the society reported to the yearly meeting of the Society of Friends in New York Wednesday. The meeting dates from the London Yearly and Southeastern New York and from Plainfield, who join with them in New York city in composing the New York yearly meeting, which is the general committee similar to that of a year ago.

The visiting Friends are all noticed and entertained in the middle of the session. There are three or four general or committee meetings during each day and evening, and between the meetings the Friends, many of whom are related to each other, sit and stand around in the meeting rooms or in the wide porch of the sewing building and talk over the times they last met. Very gentle are they in all their speech and walk and intercourse, and if fewer of the Friends wear broad brims and plain coats than do those few accentuate the groups, and as they stand against the green background of Stuyvesant Square they are pleasant to look at as a clump of silver hind trees in a broad meadow.

At the general meeting yesterday afternoon the clerk of the meeting, William C. Willits, read the answers to the formal queries addressed by the yearly meeting to the various monthly meetings in the local organization. The queries relate to the observation of the details of action required by the Book of Discipline. The manner of conducting a business meeting in the Society of Friends is peculiar to that body. The clerk of the meeting is the presiding officer, and he reads reports from various committees slowly and in a loud voice, that all may hear clearly, and then waits for Friends to speak such things as they choose. Sometimes the meeting is opened for a long time; sometimes several persons speak.

The men and women hold separate business meetings. Wednesday afternoon, Judge Clement Biddle, of Philadelphia, one of the Friends assembled in their own meeting. Several Friends signified the general consent to his preaching, and then the clerk appointed a committee to go and "inform the women of John's concern." No. Friend is called "Master". He is called "John" or "James" or "William", whatever his Christian name may be. The committee went, and soon returned, bringing the consent of the women. So Judge Cornell preached, and when he had finished speaking he returned and sat among the other men again. Some wore their hats, but the room was clean, and the atmosphere was as it is the right to doubt his own soul guides him which is the Friend's choicest privilege.

The committee on philanthropic work reported the doings of Friends generally in the matter of prison reform, the education of the negro in the south, temperance, peace, and the tobacco habit.

*Friends in town are waiting for the con*sent of the police commissioners to receive gifts of clothing in the care of the police matrons, to be used by women who may need such things to make a decent appearance in court.

The opinion on tobacco reported its pleasure in the belief that fewer persons used tobacco now than some years ago, and in the matter of temperance the yearly meeting adopted a memorial addressed to the Commissioners of the World's Columbian Exposition protesting against the granting of intoxicating liquors at the World's Fair.

Nothing was said in meeting about the proposed Sunday opening of the fair, but an individual Friend said afterward that he did not think the society would object especially to the opening of the fair on First Day.

A LEAP SAVES COL. SHEPARD.

He Narrowly Escapes Serious Injury at Portland, Oregon.

Col. Elliott F. Shepard, of New York, brother of A. D. Shepard of South Plains, while out driving at Portland, Oregon, Thursday last, with several friends, had a near resulting very seriously, if not fatally. In company with several Eastern Rappoyea, Col. Shepard took a drive to Mount Tabor, in Portland Heights. While returning, one of the horses took fright at a cable car and shied. The animal fell and was caught under the carriage tongue. By great coolness on the part of the Colonel a collision was avoided and the animal was extricated without injury.

When near the intersection of Eighteenth and Hoyt streets the team fell into a deep ditch, which was being dug for a large water main. The tongue of the surrey was broken and the dashboard was smashed. Col. Shepard leaped out just in time to escape being thrown into the ditch himself. One of his legs was bruised and he was pretty badly shaken up. He had not jumped he would have been caught under the carriage and perhaps killed. His escape was really marvelous.

The team was finally extricated, but the horses were very badly hurt. Col. Shepard was to have delivered a lecture Saturday evening, but owing to the present death of his nephew, William H. Vanderbilt, in New York, he has concluded not to do so.

Not to Be Taken.

The Rochester Democrat relates a comical incident which took place in a certain city lady of our acquaintance's dining room. Naturally she was somewhat nervous at first, but the girl waiting on her performed a little, and she was soon quite at ease.

The dessert was being served, and the elderly lady, seeing a plate of passing pretty little pink frosted cakes to be eaten with the iced cream. A plate of them was held before her by the girl, who looked them over, and said: "I don't care for any."

The waiter was moving away when she saw, as she thought, an eclair on the farther side of the plate. She was fond of eclairs.

"Yes, I will, too," she said, reaching over for the eclair. "There is one with chocolate on it."

"Beg pardon, miss," said the waiter, as she tried to pick up the tempting morsel, "beg pardon, miss, but that's my thumb."

Decidedly Problematic.

"You were at a high tea the other day, I believe?"

"Yes."

"Was it a fashionable affair?"

"O, decidedly so. It was attended by the very best people. Very select."

"Indeed!"

"Yes; I know they were the very best, for they had a professional reader there, and while he was reading Mrs. Astony's oration everybody talked and laughed just as if there had been no reader there."—N. Y. Sun.

"I suppose I should," she queried wearily, "is that what they bored people with?"—Detroit Free Press.

If they fail you get your money back. Is there any more liberal offer? Is there any more honest one? Is there any more generous one? Is there any more than a million dollars ever offered for a medicine? Yet that's what Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery has paid for weak, sick, ailing people, in cases of Consumption, Bronchitis, Severe Coughs, Weak Lungs, Spitting of Blood, Shortness of Breath, Chronic Nasal Catarrh, and kindred affections. Sold by druggists. Nothing like it. Nothing "just as good." Don't be persuaded into taking a substitute. —"Elysium", Pierce's new lyric comedy at Hermann's Grand opera house, has scored a success of the most emphatic character. It is a novelty with various fetching features and as such it has attracted more than passing notice. In fact, Hermann's elegant playhouse was crowded all of last week. The scenery of "Elysium" is rich with oriental splendor while the costumes are a dream and Eastern magnificence and creations of recent Parisian fashions. Several handsome new songs will be introduced. The chorus is composed of fifty girls who sing and dance to the tune of melodious melodies that please the ear and attract the eye of any observer. The comedy is a clever creation about the place that will carry it along on the popular wave of success. It is destined to run several weeks if not all summer.

TO LEASE MUSIC HALL.

Manager Demarest to Assume Full Responsibility—Officers Elected by the Board.

A proposition was received by the board trustees of Music Hall Monday night, that hereafter all responsibility of the hall be vested in a lessee, and favorable action on the proposition was taken. The applicant to lease the hall was J. A. Demarest, who for several years has managed the hall during the season just ended. He is desirous of assuming full control of the theatre and exercising his unhampered judgment in the selection of companies to appear here. This plan is deemed a most excellent one for the house and the public, as heretofore the quality of attractions has frequently suffered through the management's having to submit to the control of the board. It is believed that the sole management of one man of liberalizing experience and wide histrionic acquaintance will be more advantageous than the joint direction of a board, some of whose members cannot be expected to be intimately engaged in such affairs as the booking of troupes for a local theatre. Mr. Demarest's reduction of admission to popular prices was received with high favor by the public, and generous patronage was the result, particularly as the quality of entertainment produced was uniformly excellent. His proposition to lease the house was therefore viewed favorably.

The terms of the proposal were regarded as favorable, and the matter was referred to a committee consisting of Messrs. Gilbert, Murray and Marsh, who were given authority and power to effect the lease as proposed, with slight modifications in a few minor particulars. If the lease is granted, as now seems probable, the public can look for a high quality of amusement at popular prices.

The board of directors elected officers for the year as follows:

President—Alpheus Gilbert.
Secretary—Craig A. Marsh.
Treasurer—O. T. Warner.
Executive committee—W. E. Lowe, John W. Murray, W. J. Rose, C. A. Marsh.
Entertainment committee—J. B. Dumont, W. E. Lowe, C. A. Marsh.

At 3:30 o'clock Monday afternoon Miss Teenie Noel, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Auguste Noel, was married to J. Herbert Johnston, son of John Taylor Johnston of 8 Fifth avenue and this city. The house was beautifully decorated with flowers from the Johnston place at Plainfield. Between the front drawing room windows was erected an altar lighted with candles and surmounted by a crucifix. The mantels were banked with roses, and in the doorways were footings of smilax and box-wood bloscoms.

The bride appeared in a white satin gown very plainly made. Appliqued lace ornamented the high corsage and sleeves, as well as the train. Her veil was of old family lace. She carried a bouquet of orange blossoms and lilies of the valley.

There were two bridesmaids, Miss Josephine and Miss Loulou Noel, the bride's sisters, and both were dressed in white organdie muslin, embroidered with clusters of white daisies. PROSPEROUS NEW JERSEY.

The Building and Loan Associations Institute the Financial Condition of the State.

There are 78,636 subscribers, holding altogether 516,777 shares, and 19,206 borrowers. The total value of all outstanding shares is $26,606,373. "HE'LL EXPLAIN ALL."

HOWARD EMERSON'S FAMILY AND FRIENDS SAY HE WILL WHEN HE RETURNS.

He is One of the Executors of Mrs. Thomas B. Stillman's Estate, Which is Said to Be Involved in a Great Deal of Litigation.

(From The Press of May 20

William M. Stillman, Esq., requests THE PRESS to publish the following, this morning:

I wish to repudiate the reports in the New York papers purporting to be interviews with me as to the Howard A. Emerson matter. The statements contained therein were not obtained in the New York Sun. I have made no communication and know nothing as to the alleged defalcations.

WM. M. STILLMAN.

The story he thinks approaches nearest to the nearest is the following:

Howard Emerson of Carrington & Emerson, lawyers, 115 Broadway, and a member of the Crescent League, the fashionable club of Plainfield, left his house in that town a week ago Monday, and has not returned. His friends gave out that he had made some unfortunate speculations in lands in the West, and had gone to do what he could to save something from the wreck. Subsequently a statement was printed in THE PRESS, and immediately there were rumors that the young man's financial troubles involved the estate of the late Mrs. Thomas B. Stillman. Emerson and Carmon Parse, who was until his death a year ago the cashier of the First National Bank of Plainfield, were the executors of the estate. Mr. Parse was ill for several years before his death, and the handling of the estate was left entirely in Emerson's hands.

Mrs. Stillman died three years ago. Her estate was valued at about $25,000, principally in stocks and bonds. The testator stipulated that the two executors should not be required to give bonds. Among the bequests were $5,000 to Mrs. Rebecca Cardner, whom Mrs. Stillman had reared; $2,000 each to two Seventh-day Baptist colleges, $2,000 to the Alfred University, $2,000 each to the Seventh-day Baptist churches of New York and Plainfield, $2,000 to the Seventh-day Baptist Missionary society, $5,000 to Emerson's mother, and $2,000 to young Emerson. The residuary estate was to be divided among five nephews and nieces of Mrs. Stillman. Shortly after the will was made Mrs. Cardner died, and her portion of the estate, which had not been paid over to her, descended to her son, Evaston Cardner, who is a machinist.

Two years ago Mr. Emerson filed a bill in the court of chancery of New Jersey to have the will construed. He alleged that it was a hard task for him to pay over many of the legacies, owing to the indefiniteness of the terms of the will. He attacked particularly the bequests to the two colleges and to the missionary society. Lawyer William P. Stillman, who represented the churches, says the suit, instead of being a friendly one, developed into a direct attack on these three bequests, and it was necessary to make a vigorous defense.

The suit dragged along until two weeks ago. Then vice-chancellor Green notified the lawyer that he had decided in favor of the bequests to the churches and the missionary society, and he directed latter's portion to be classed with the residuary estate Lawyer Stillman concluded it would not pay to appeal the case, and as counsel for the churches he notified Mr. Reed, who was Mr. Emerson's lawyer, that there would be no appeal, and requested that the legacies for the church should be paid. A day or so afterward he got a note from Mr. Reed to the effect that there was not enough left of the estate to pay the costs of the suit, and that he himself had had to go down in his pocket and put up money for the costs. There was no alternative but to have it become of the estate and none has been made. There the matter rests.

Whether any of the legatees have got any of the money bequeathed to them is not known. Cardner has not received his, he says, and the churches have not received theirs. Mr. Reed says he has been mismanaged or there has been any misappropriation is a question that may be decided by some sort of a legal investigation. So far as known, no such investigation has been begun. Meantime Emerson's club friends say they are sure that when he returns from the West he will make satisfactory explanations, and that any money due will be forthcoming. Lawyer Reed was not at home when a reporter called last night.

Mr. Carrington, Mr. Emerson's law partner, said yesterday:

"Mr Emerson has been with me for many years, and I always treated him as still my friend. He has a large interest in a store in Bay harden, Ia., and I have an idea that he may have gone out there. He owes me about $1,000, no such in the firm, they do not lose a cent. Mr Emerson had charge of the case of Homer R. Baldwin against the New York Central railroad for damages for injuries received by Mrs. Baldwin in the accident at Hastings, and about $5,000 passed through his hands. The money, however, is all accounted for. Mr. Emerson's relations to his mother from Buffalo on May 11, and that is the last that was heard of him."

Homer R. Baldwin, who is living at Yonkers, where his wife is slowly recovering from her injuries, said last night that after the Hastings accident he had given Mr. Emerson $5,500 to pay his bills as they were presented. As Mr. Baldwin himself had paid some of the bills, the accounts were a little confused, but he thought Mr. Emerson must still have about $1,800 of his money.

COOK BROTHERS AT THE HEAD.

The Retired Lumber Merchants to Control the Bank of Westfield.

Alfred D. Cook will be president of the Bank of Westfield, and the directorship of the First National bank of Westfield that has just been incorporated and which expects to begin business in September. There are two sons in the wife, which would also be higher in the respect, deeper in the confidence and broader in the esteem of the universal people, than the Messrs. Cook of Westfield. Alfred Cook of Westfield is to be congratulated and her people should never go to sleep nights without giving thanks that their lives are not shrewd and careful brothers.

The balance of the board of directors are C. O. Sherrerd, H. L. Fisk and J. S. Irving, also men of high standing and financial ability whose successful business lives prove them well-fitted to guide and control such an institution. The new bank building of stone and brick is to be erected at the corner of Broad and Elm streets. The plans are by architect A. L. H. Marsh of this city. There will be a handsome circular front on the corner which will be the quarters of the bank 75 feet deep on each street, while the portion on the south side will be the home of the bank's offices and running through from one street to the other. The second floor of the building will be offices, and the third floor lodge rooms.

MAY THE BEST TEAM WIN!

A Remark to The DAILY PRESS, the Crescent League and the Rhodes Combs or Plainfields.

SOMERVILLE, N. J., May 26.—The league season opens to-morrow in Rhodes and Plainfield. Weather permitting there will be large crowds to see both games. For the last two weeks the managers of the respective teams have been practicing hard to get the best nine in the fray. New York and vicinity has been ransacked for good ball players, and when the teams come together to-morrow it is safe to say that they are evenly matched. It is better so. The contests will be closer, big scores will not be the order of things and the game will be more interesting. Up to date, interest will be kept up, the attendance will increase rather than diminish as the season wears, and it is not improbable that when the season closes three of the teams will be tied for first place. Which will be out of the race, at present cannot be determined; that one will be left for some time to come. It can remain as did the last man in Mollister's 150—not so-sed. Manager Mack will place the first ball team in the game at Elizabeth to-morrow as follows: Harkins, p; Kennedy, c; Cannon, 1b; Farrell, 2b; Monohan, 3b; Hoffman, ss; Byrnes, lf; Ryan, cf, and Castills, in the field. This is a tremendous batting team; and should win hands down. Our new "pennon" has not materialized yet, but will do so before the game with the Crescents on June 18, at Plainfield. The game with the Gorhams on Wednesday of this week ought to be a corker. The Crescents are very strong this year, and that there is but little for them to fear from the other clubs. It is expected here that the Crescents will be the team to beat. Westfield on Saturday, thus making the Crescents and West Ends deadly rivals from the start; but sometimes the best of plans go astray; and if on the other hand they should both lose they will still be rivals, but for the tail-ender's place.

For the past few days nothing has been talked about in this quiet little town but the openin, of the league season, and the chances each team has of success. The $2,000 cash prize to be gathered in by the church has been almost as freely discussed as manager Mack's galaxy of stars. It is like old times of three years ago. The only loser seems to be the wife of some of it is Plainfield and the West Ends, and no others What a pity that the league season could not have been inaugurated by a game between these two!—thus fanning the gentle flame into a blaze at once. Never mind! They close the season together, playing the last game on the Somerville grounds, and if affairs are in such a condition that the West Ends must have that game to win the pennant, you bet it was a safe bet for me to pay over money in put in to umpire. Remember the old saw—"Let others do as you would be done by, but yourself under all circumstances"; it is a little mixed up, but it may stand.

Here's in a fi ming basket that West End is bound to bounce, that O'Neil is knocked out of the box in the first inning, that gentle Willie Murphy gets a four-bagger every time he goes to the bat, and that the pennant comes to the West End way! GEO. W. ARBOTT, JR.

PLAINFIELD THE CHOICE AGAIN.

An Enterprising Publishing Firm Selects This City as Its Headquarters.

The New Jersey Law Journal Publishing company has decided to locate its plant permanently in Plainfield, with editorial offices as heretofore in Newark. Yesterday its president, A. V. D. Honeyman, formerly editor of the Trenton Times, and who now resides in North Plainfield, rented offices directly opposite the site of the station, in J. F. Valk's building, in this city, and will remove his two offices, but, later, expects to take in two more contiguous rooms.

The company will publish regularly the New Jersey Law Journal, the only periodical devoted to Jersey laws and decisions and various books from time to time. Within a few months Judge Gedney's work on Precedents a work of 1,000 pages by Oscar Jeffery, esq., of Warren county, and the third edition of Mr. Honeyman's "Orphans' Court Precedents and Parties' and District Courts", it expects to bring out two other legal books fully. The American Corporation Manual company will also be published at the same office.

Mr. Honeyman said to-day to a Press representative: "Plainfield is so centrally situated that it is equally convenient from Alaska to Cape Horn and even to Japan through the Chautauqua movement, that we shall feel no compunctions in putting in bold letters that Plainfield is published on many books, some of which we shall circulate in South as well as North America."

Other parties interested in the company are P. Q. Keasbey, esq., of Newark, son of ex-United States District Attorney Keasbey, and once a member of the Assembly; Mr. Keasbey is himself the author of the newest legal work on Electrical Railway law), and Charles E. Hoagwerf, esq., of Jersey City, who is a native of Hallander by birth, but has one of the keenest of minds for push and successful enterprises. Both these gentlemen are men of capital.

Extending the County Roads.

(From The Plainfield Journal.)

An item in the Plainfield Press says that a new county road is being advocated, to be built between that city and Railway. This is but another evidence of the utility and popularity of the county roads. It will be remembered that when county roads were first agitated a good many good people of Plainfield, and all of the Press Publishing company, set up a howl price for a considerable time on the ground that Plainfield had already built and paid for several miles of fine roads and that it was not equal to help pay for roads in other parts of the county. But in time Plainfield came heartily to the support of the magnificent scheme and it has been glad of it ever since. And now Plainfield wants another driveway, out to the city of Railway. In time no doubt the road will be built. Union county may not think it advisable to build it just now, but certain it is that the people want more good roads instead of less of them.

Wedding.

An exciting runaway took place on North avenue at 10:20 this morning. Mr. Taylor Johnston's fine team of horses became untied for a moment, and the animal took fright at the cars and galloped down the street. At the corner of Park avenue a horse tripped on the curb and crossed, fell, and slid on its side across the street, finishing up against the concrete light-pole in front of Miss Lincoln's residence. The pole alone saved the groomsmen from demolition. The slide of the horse was a tremendous one, beginning even Gentle Willie Murphy's gentle heart to bleed in human. The wagon was upset, and the shafts broken. Dog catcher Fetzbee held the horse after its fall.

BURNING OF THE ROOKERY.

How Thirty Families Lived in a Famous Old Somerset Building.

The old store-house that was burned at Gaterville, near Bound Brook, a day or two ago, is told in these columns at the time, adjoined the old Gaterville hotel, was a most historic structure, and was where forty years ago Col. Sanderson, who drove a stage line between New Brunswick and Easton, changed horses. The store at that time was kept by Wm. Adair, one of Somerset county's most noted residents. There has been probably more business done in the old building than anywhere else in the county. When a Penn reporter visited the spot, the night of the fire, but little was left unconsumed and was a mass of smoking embers. The burned-out tenants were huddled on the opposite side of the road, each with a few household goods about them, terror-stricken, and excitedly jabbering to themselves. One old woman looked the perfect picture of an Egyptian mummy, as she sat on a pile of goods, bundled up in a bed quilt, with a look of most abject terror in her eyes. Inquiry as to how the fire was started failed to bring out anything from the befuddled foreigners, but from a few disjointed sentenses given in their mother tongue, with the help of a neighboring farmer, the following story was gleaned: It seems that on Sunday a wedding took place in the house, one of the daughters of the large families inhabiting it being the lucky bride. Of course a royal good time was in order, and, with fire-water in abundance, the whole family were put to it to succeed to have it. All day Monday the jollification was kept up, and daylight on Tuesday saw no let-up in the revelry. The crowd was gathered in a more intoxicated and the fun grew fast and furious. Dancing was kept up to music furni-hed by a one-stringed violin and a three-legged piano, and that no one lot would tire and drop off in the corner to sleep there were new arrivals to take their places. Finally out of the room, not quite so befuddled as the others, went up stairs into one of the smaller bed rooms, and hung himself on the bed. It was noticed when he went up that the rope he was smoking. Whether or not he at once fell fast asleep and his cigar set fire to the bedding, will never be known; but it's minutes after he went into the room the whole upper part of the house was filled with smoke and flame, and it was seen at a glance that the old rookery was doomed. The few who were partly sober succeeded in getting all the inmates out alive, although for a time it was thought that several had perished. The large old-fashioned chimneys were the only things about the place not entirely consumed, being still standing. The two-story brick was pointed out as the spot wringing her hands, beside the road, over the loss of her entire outfit. Everybody had gone up in the house to see her bridal outfit, which included the first really good garments she had since coming to this country, was gone, and as she was a most estimable young woman in her back she was the picture of disappointment.

The alarm brought the Bound Brook hook and Ladder company out in record time, but they did nothing—not even pulling down the tall brick chimneys, which still stand a menace to life and limb

The house was owned by a woman who lives in Philadelphia, and was not insured.

A CHORAL AFTERTHOUGHT.

And now the Choral season is
As thin as line of page,
We lay our full dress suits away
In camphor-ize and sage,
And yOu may find us stuffing wads
Of cotton in each ear,
To save us from that dreadful Phil-
Harmonic band next year,
And every time we pass the store
Of Mr. Irvington Bass,
It takes our breath away to see
Before the fly-screen draw,
A little line of dollars
Already on the ground,
To grab for each one that sticks
When the dealer comes around.

A REALM OF PURE DELIGHT.

How Happy Plainfielders Spend Their Summers, in the Garden-Spot of Nature's Wilderness.

THE PRESS is in receipt of a delightful volume issued by the Adirondack League club for private circulation among the club's members and friends. Besides the details of the club's organization and laws, the book gives a most charming series of pictures of life in that sportsman's and nature-lover's paradise, the Adiron dack region. The beauties of the forest lodge, the woods and lakes and trout streams, are all beautifully pictured and described, and to absorb the delights of the pages is the club's organization in its realm of true happiness. The club is a famous and flourishing one, as it needs must to with such men as Henry C. Gibbs of this city and Plainfield at its head, and such other members as G. Henry Squires, Augustus D. Shepard, jr., and J. K. VanArsdale, all well-known Plainfielders, on its roll. Other prominent members are Mark M. ("Brick") Pomeroy, Col. Elliott F. Shepard, Warner Miller, and Stanford White. The club is regularly incorporated, with a capital of 500 shares that will soon be worth $2 000 each. It owns one of the most valuable tracts of land in the heart of the Adirondack lake region, way up in the mountain tops, and the club-house and members' cottages and forest, land and fish and game preserves are a part of delightful resort for the Waltons and Nimrods and their guests.

Notes from the Forest Works.

Quite a funny incid-nt happened in the Works last week. One of the workmen in the pattern department bought a box of sardines for his dinner, and as usual threw the empty box on the floor. The buyer who employs one of the colore sewer boy refused to take it out, leaving it lying there. The boys concealed it among the shavings, but "Pat" found it and again threw it out, saying he would not remove it. The boys got their heads together, and as Pat always takes his sizzling home, they hollowed out a piece of wood, painting it and the sardine, and stuffed another piece over it. Pat took it home, and while splitting it up discovered the box and issued the joke as good he told it to himself next day.

Pat Riley, while shoving cars with a bar in the yard at the Works, lost a finger, nail, which was taken out when set in a splinter.

Latest Hand.

Work was resumed Monday both outside for the Day Nursery. It will not be closed at any considerable time by the management, Saturday.

HIRED A BOY TO BURN THE HOUSE.

One Way of Effecting a Relinquishment of an Objectionable Tenant.

Lewis Green, a lad whose mother is known as Silver Green, set fire to the house of Mrs. Shields at 25 East Second Monday morning. He was playing with matches, and started a curtain burning. Quite a blaze was in progress, when Mrs. Marsh, called in Mrs. Taylor, a neighbor, and the fire was soon extinguished. Complaint was then made to marshal Pangborn, who will probably arrest the Green lad for malicious mischief.

The people of Race street complain bitterly of the character of the house kept by Mrs. Marsh, and have asked the authorities to remove the objectionable tenants. It is alleged that the Green boy was induced to start the fire by those anxious to rid the neighborhood of the nuisance, and who would prefer to see the house burn down than be used for the purposes it is now said to be devoted to.

FELINE ACROBATS.

How They Are Taught and What They Can Do.

Pasha Can Jump Through a Hoop of Fire, Leonia Rides on a Tricycle, and Paddy and Alice L. Spar in a Ring.

The ordinary cat of commerce, the purely domestic product of the streets, is not generally regarded as being a creature of striking prominence, so far as his or her possibilities in the way of civilization are considered. To Jack, to the careless observer, whose mind has not been trained to grapple with abstract baseballs, the cat of New York city would appear as a rule to have been created only for the purpose of furnishing to the funny man of the press a welcome object for ridicule, to be, with the assistance of the inevitable small jack, transformed into a joke. But, says the New York Tribune, since Prof. Welsher's show has come to test the possibilities of the cat, the ordinary, scraggy, baleful-eyed, wicked and disheveled street cat, has received enough more than so greatly as to open to the view of the critical mind a vista of unbounded promise for the animal.

Henry Wilton, or Prof. Welton, as his name appears on the programme, is a German, having been born in Berlin in 1850. To him, as to most of the trainers in the show, the business of training animals comes naturally. For one hundred and fifty years before his birth his ancestors had been engaged in handling and breaking wild animals, particularly tigers and lions, and other large animals of the cat tribe. He inherited that confidence and that other peculiar quality which has no name but which makes some men naturally the conquerors of fierce beasts, and at the age of sixteen years he exhibited five lions which he had trained himself. Walking along the streets one night in the jovial mood of those who have no financial problems to vex them he spied a pretty, miserable looking, abject specimen of a gray cat. Now, to a trainer of big cats as cat upon the gutter's brim was no common feline, but it was something more. So he took the animal home, and that cat is the one which now delights children in the show twice a day by his remarkable feats. He soon found that he had a social show mixer and now Pasha, as he has been named, has become a cat of cats. A Romany of great price. Pasha is the cat who jumps through twelve-ups of fire and though the clothes of the latter feat was the most difficult to teach him, and Pasha still looks on the drum with suspicion. He doesn't know what to do with it when he breaks through the paper drumheads and that disquieting unoccupied space in his paper-clad skin heart. But to those who know the nature of all animals of the cat tribe and particularly the fear they entertain of fire, the leap through the blazing hoops will remain the most wonderful. It required an incredible amount of patience, and also that peculiar influence over the trainer, to teach the cat this trick. The trainer began by making him leap through rings the size of a trundling hoop, and gradually decreased the diameter until he got down to the present small hoops, which are just large enough for the animal's body to pass through.

When Wilton found Pasha so able and brilliant he decided to try again, and at last he had a collection of forty-two cats, which he exhibited throughout the country. After he had been back in Mexico, and there the climate killed twenty of them. In exchange for these he brought back only one little spotted and devil of a Mexican greaser cat, which is also a clever performer. This combination, and unlike Harris, is most "unwillin'." Her health is poor, also, and she is too delicate to train. This same trouble prevents the training of Angora and Maltese cats, although these two breeds are the most intelligent and easy to teach. Hardy animals being required, most of the cats are the common tiger cats. They do well enough, however, as anyone will acknowledge, after seeing old Tom walk on his fore feet, Leonia ride on the see-saw, while Flora, the baby lion, stands in the middle with her eyes, stands in the middle. It was hard to teach Flora that. Cats do not like to lie on their backs, and while they wander around in their own free way.

Paddy and John L., who spar in the two-foot ring, have a million ways that they spar, and they fight a square fight, than some of the "amateurs" and professional boxers on the public.

The Height of Clouds.

The highest clouds, cirrus and cirro stratus, rise, on an average, to a height of nearly 30,000 feet. The middle clouds keep at from about 10,000 to 25,000 feet above the surface of the earth, the lower clouds seldom lower than 5,000 or higher than 7,000 feet. The cumulous clouds float with their lower surface at a height of 4,000 to 5,000 feet, while their summits frequently extend upwards to a height of 10,000 feet. The base of the Alps often completely is hidden by clouds of the third class, while many of the other classes are frequently seen above the tops of the peaks like the top of smoke. Prof. Moller took observations on one cloud, the vertical dimensions of which was seven miles.

No Other Course.

Railway President (at meeting of stockholders)—Gentlemen, the case stands just this way: The business of this road has increased enormously, and on the basis of the original stock it is paying about fourteen per cent. But the stock has been watered so many times greatly expanded, and in spite of the most careful economy in managing the road it is not paying only about four per cent. on the stock. Unless there is a phenomenal increase in business we shall have to reduce our dividends next year. Now the question is: What is to be done?

Stockholders (unanimously) — Make another reduction of ten per cent. in wages.—Chicago Tribune.

ROBERTS OF CANDAHAR.

Unquestionably the Greatest of England's Soldiers.

Lord Wolseley's First Chief a Protege—The Almost Foolish Generosity—What Lord Napier Thinks Of Him—Great Hands.

The elevation to the peerage of his excellency Gen. Sir Frederick Sleigh Roberts, Bart. G. C. B., V. C., which was announced in the issue of the "New Year" and has just now been completed by the introduction of the new peer, has been delayed for many years through the influence of Gen. Sir Garnet Wolseley, who has long been notoriously jealous of his junior. Wolseley, whom his friends call "England's only general," has been until recently adjutant general of the British army, stationed at the Horse Guards, and in daily intercourse with the authorities of the army. A little more than a year ago he was made commander-in-chief in Ireland, and his departure to a new field of work has allowed the influence of the queen and Duffy's son-in-law to exert itself in favor of the man who is considered to be by far the ablest general in the army.

Gen. Roberts is by a year an older man than his rival, Lord Wolseley. He was born in Waterford, Ireland, Dec. 30, 1832, the second son of Sir Abraham Roberts, a general officer of distinction. His elder brother is a major general on the retired list. Frederick Sleigh Roberts was educated at Eton and at Sandhurst, and he departed from the latter place to become a lieutenant in the Bengal artillery in 1851. In 1858, during the mutiny, he won the Victoria cross for valor by recapturing from several sepoys a British flag, and he distinguished himself on several occasions during those dark days. In 1860 he was promoted captain, and in 1863 got an Indian medal for bravery in some of the numerous skirmishes with the hill men.

In 1868 he was an assistant quartermaster general with Gen. Napier in Abyssinia; Napier returned with a peerage, and Roberts increased his collection of medals. In 1872 he obtained a C. B. for bravery in the Looshai campaign in

GEN. LORD ROBERTS OF CANDAHAR.

India. He was promoted major and colonel soon afterward, and in 1878 was quartermaster general, with the rank of major general, in the staff of the commander-in-chief in India.

In that year the Afghan war broke out, and Sir Frederick Haines, who was created K. C. B., a promotion unconferring knighthood. He went to the front during that war, and led the force which captured Cabul after the murder of Sir Louis Cavagnari, the British envoy sent in that city. September 8, 1879. He defeated the Afghans on October 6, and entered the city on the 12th of the month. He was made Companion of the Order of the Indian Empire for this service, and received in recognition of the city then, holding it for upward of a year.

In July, 1880, Ayoob Khan, a pretender to the Afghan throne, defeated a British army under Gen. Burrows, and drove the survivors into Candahar which place he proceeded leisurely to invest. Roberts gathered about 10,000 men and departed from Cabul early in August, leaving Cabul to be occupied by Abdurrahman Khan, whom the British supported.

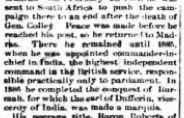
For three weeks nothing was heard of him, and it was thought that he had been cut off, as many other British soldiers had been, by the Afghans. But on September 1 Roberts appeared suddenly in front of Candahar, to Ayoob's great surprise. On September 2 he attacked Ayoob Khan and defeated him completely, capturing thirty-two guns, and relieving Gen. Burrows in his distressed condition. That march to Candahar made Roberts famous. In it he owns in a large measure his peerage and the grant of £20,000 which he has since received. The march, though less important, is a parallel to Sherman's march to the sea, and its success is the skill of the commander.

Roberts was created G. C. B. and a baronet. In 1881 he was appointed to the command of the army in Madras. On February 28, 1885, he was sent to South Africa to take charge of the campaign there to an end after the death of Gen. Colley. Peace was made before he could begin, so he returned to Madras. There he remained until 1886, when he was appointed commander-in-chief in India, the highest independent command in the British service, responsible practically only to parliament. In 1888 he received the appointment of field marshal, for which the earl of Dufferin, viceroy of India, was made a marquis.

His generalship, Baron Roberts of Candahar and Waterford, comes from two sources, one hereditary and in part; the first portion, as intimated, from the city where he appeared so opportunely to succeed where he made his first appearance on any stage

A Vegetable Curiosity.

A gentleman who lives in Mount Vernon, ia., is said to have a veritable curiosity in the vegetable line. It is a cabbage, or collards that in going to seed just literally spread itself out like a fan and grew in that form. Ten long and about half an inch thick, the top being ornamented with a fringe composed of thousands of bloom buds.



BRIDGE OVER PECOS RIVER, IN COURSE

nearly all of which are iron-plate girders, alternately 25 feet and 65 feet in length. In the middle, directly above the bed of the river, is a cantilever span 165 feet in length. The structure is supported by towers 90x100 at the base and 90 feet high, which rest on stone ledges or rock piers.

The lightness of the structure gives it a graceful appearance, and the mechanical engineers and railroad men say it is one of the most substantial bridges ever built. The work was done by the Pecos Valley bridge company, of which Mr. Gould is president, and was completed in about two months. The bridge is on the line of the Texas Pacific railway, which is now being extended from Fort Worth to El Paso.

Not Entirely Alone.

He—Have I got to tell you that I love you?

She—O no; I guess you've been making a fool of yourself long enough to satisfy me.—Life.

Not Entirely Dead.

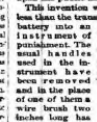
WHIPPED WITH WIRES.

Electricity Employed in Torture Cubists ents Like Children.

Electricity a mode of punishing refractory children is the latest method adopted in a New Jersey reform school. The attention of the Newark Call's correspondent was attracted to the home, many of whom have been committed to the institution by Newark police justices. They are said to manifest a supreme contempt for bread and water and the rod, and so the superintendent and Dr. Whitborne, the official physician, presumably with the idea of making the home more pleasant and profitable for the little guests, laid their heads together, and the result was something which had produced a deep impression not only upon the minds of the children, but upon the public as well.

THE CAT.

This invention was nothing more nor less than the transposition of an electric battery into an instrument of punishment. The small hand dies used in the instrument have been pierced and in the place of one of them a wire brush two inches long has been placed.



FOR THE BASE OF THE BRAIN.

The place of the other is taken by an ordinary piece of wood, rounded, about two and a half inches in length. On the end of it is a flat piece of metal covered with a thin sponge.

When one of the children has committed a grievous infraction of the discipline of the school he is quietly taken into a room where there is no one but himself, the superintendent and the doctor. The sponge-covered electrode is immersed in water and applied to the base of the culprit's skull. The other handle or brush is held in close proximity to the child, and when the current is turned on it is applied to his face, neck or arms.

The moment the brush touches the child the electric circuit is closed and a severe shock sustained. Superintendent Hiram says the process works to the entire satisfaction of every one with the possible exception of the child. The case is being investigated.

JOE, THE CHIMPANZEE.

Successor to the Lamented Sally of the London Zoo.

An Unseemly Youth with a Beautiful Cough—He Will Soon Be Tempted to Smoke Cigarettes—Joe Likes Cheese Sandwiches.

JOE, SALLY'S SUCCESSOR.

The late lamented Sally, fairest—that is to say, blackest—and wisest of anthropoid apes, has been replaced. Sally died of a cough. Joe, the new, the place that knows her no more, and that has looked so wonderfully empty of late in the monkey house, is a young monkey of amarillos were occasionally let into it to dispel the gloom, is now again the center of attraction. Joe is a Jack the Ourang is at home. He peeps around the corner to get a look at the newcomer, and, considering his extreme youth, he is a fast, friendly hand wherewith to grip him in a brotherly grasp, but as yet his wiles are in vain. Joe is sadly, hanging not yet recovered from the fatigues of the journey, refuses to come to the front for more than a minute or two at a time. And when, at last, the friendly approaches of the sleek ourang are accepted he is not overwhelmingly gracious. For the new "Sally" is not a lady at all, he is only "a friend and a brother," and a painfully juvenile one at that. Of Sally's beauty he has none, nor of her fine stature. He is, indeed, a small, pale-faced youth, a mere cadet, of three or four years of age, untrained, unpolished and sadly unmannerly. He has a pale, which, with chimpanzees, denotes not exactly the highest breeding. Joe has not yet received a name, for the officials of the Zoological gardens, the sponsors, as it were, of the anthropoids, in whom it is sacredly the duty of naming the apes do not yet know what appellation will best befit the successor of Sally.

The new chimpanzee was brought to London from Liverpool, not as the property of the Zoological society, but only on approval. He was suffering from a bad cold—the anthropoid apes of the Zoo rarely always do—when he arrived and he is suffering still. The box in which he traveled is with him; in it he keeps his blankets, and to it his meals and medicines are taken. His bronchial tubes are his weakest point, and almost human, too, is the gesture of putting one of his hands on his chest after a paroxysm of coughing. And the human tongue, as spoken by the chimpanzee, is anything but human, consisting of one long, sad, wailing, inane inflection or expression. The newcomer has a cold as well as a cough, and his behavior in the matter of food also bears troubles him, is nothing short of disgraceful. The officials apologize and say that young apes are always like that. Sally's society manners they feel the difference. However, the cold and cough are improving, and before long the chimpanzee's education will commence, when, first of all, table manners will be taught. For Sally, it is said, while the ourang drinks his milk daintily out of a cup, always uses a knife and spoon. Sally's successor, in primitive anthropoid fashion, dips his long thin fingers into the fluid and sucks them clean.

His Forgetfulness Betrayed Him.

In June last a bank at Geneva, Switzerland, was robbed of bonds to the amount of $34,000. The robber was an employe of the name of Fortier. All efforts of the Swiss police and of French detectives of the bank were useless; the thief could not be traced. A few weeks ago the chief of the Geneva police in Paris and asked the latter to certify the signature on a bond which he thought was genuine. The Parisian answered, in comparing the two signatures was astonished to find that on the bond Fortier had forgotten to add the surname of Blanchard. He immediately suspected there was something wrong, but did not speak of it to the bank clerk. He managed to detain him while he made inquiries in the city and, by telegraph, in Geneva. He soon found that Fortier and Fortier were the same individual. The former, sleight have evaded justice much longer, but for that thoughtless oversight of signing his former name.

Grandfather Among Cyclists.

There is not a more enthusiastic figure in English cycling life than Major Knox Holmes. He is eighty-four years of age, and has ridden his bicycle since he has traveled around the world, is yet a vigorous athlete and can stay with the best of them on the road. He is also a patron of the turf, was a friend and backer of Sayers, the pugilist, when that individual was in the zenith of his rosewd stroke for the Oxford crew in 1828 and on the eighteenth birthday abandoned all these pursuits for wheeling. Although it has become entirely a part of physiological doctrine that after three score years and ten there is no new development of muscle, yet when in the course of a few months' training this fine old man actually did develop muscle in the lower limbs and body it was not surprising that he is reverenced by cyclists.

Mrs. O'Rafferty—Be away wid yr nonsince! It's an actor he is. He do be right fond of it.

Mrs. McMoriarty—A lolght comedian is it?

Mrs. O'Rafferty—Yis. He stands be yant the back curtain, and his mouth to a hole furnimt a candle, an' whin Pawtrick Mike sees at the candle he blows it out.—N. Y. Weekly.

Wanted.To Know.

The lecturer on theosophy had concluded his remarks, his address and stood looking at the audience.

"If there is any question," he said, "that any of you desire to ask me before I sit down I shall be pleased to answer it.

Amid the deep silence that followed this remark an earnest-looking man near the door rose up and said:

"I'd like to know, please, if anybody has ever yet discovered a reliable and certain cure for warts!"—Chicago Tribune.

Legal Complications.

"My neighbor tied a knot in my horse's tail, and I want tee hab de law on him," said Sil Scraggs, the Chokee Creek darky, to Lawyer Gouge.

"Hand over five dollars," said the lawyer.

Si did so cheerfully.

Having got the money the lawyer said, calmly, putting it in his pocket: "My advice to you, my colored friend, is never to go near the horse's knot in your horse's tail."—Texas Siftings.

Fains.

I heard fair Rose tell gentle Jane
"Your hair is simply grand,
And curves as any horse's mane."
"I'm taken!" sighed Jane, in pain.—Judy.

An Urgent Case.

Poor Patient—I sent for you, doctor, because I know you are a good physician, but I feel it my duty to inform you that I haven't over twenty-five dollars to my name.

SOME AGED WIDOWS.

Once They Were the Brides of Dating Continentals.

Nineteen Old Ladies Now on the Government Pension Roll as the Relicts of Soldiers of the Revolutionary War.

Are you interested any of you in whose minds may hap the events of the rebellion are dimly, that there are nineteen living widows to-day in fact that the soldier of the revolution kept on marrying as near up to the day of his death as he could very well manage, and quite usually beyond his Scriptural allotment of life.

They are the nineteen surviving widows of the continental warriors. Only twenty-five years ago there were 727 of them. The oldest of them was not born until some years after the close of the war. So the spoons of each denied have been to call himself a soldier, at least twenty-five years old at Evacuation day, 1876 will be found more than one union had at least thirty years start of their brides. Give the brides in question an average of twenty years apiece to meet their fates in the wreaths of the blue and buff, and we find that the youngest of these swains must have reached the half century mark before taking to his bosom the helpmeet for whom the government now finds a little scarce in the vast edifice of its pension system. Most of them were from twenty to thirty-five years older.

So these venerated old women—whose crooking crocking chairs are scattered through the country which their husbands helped to found, from Vermont, which was the "New Hampshire Grants" more than 6 bit of debatable ground between New York and Massachusetts, to Washington, D. C., which was then undiscovered of the white men—these helpless old bodies were once each and all of them young brides, old men's darlings, apples of aged military eyes.

Nowhere else in the world does the custom still in vogue in the remotest rural districts signalizing the nuptials years after its disbandment, how many will an army which was counted by the millions leave after the Revolutionary war? Some one should figure it out. How many dollars soldiers will there be in 1976?

Of the nineteen widows to-day survivors the one who did the most by Hale himself with distinction was William Cloud, of Allendale. When the veteran lay on his deathbed in the winter of 1841, the old soldier, in the words of his wife, Nancy, had proposed him with a son. "Call him Cloud," he said to the old soldier, and half an hour later he had gone to report to the last muster roll of his old commander in the land in yonder.

The boy Washington is still living, and but fifty years old and a confederate veteran. So here are two lives of father and son that cover the history of then great nations and leave a good many years to grow over at each end.

This widow, Mrs. Nancy Cloud, is but seventy-nine years old and the brightest of the nineteen, her letter, written in her own quiet, firm hand, in answer to inquiries, is worth giving in full. It runs:

My husband, William Cloud, was a revolutionary soldier. I have often heard of the hardships he went through in the war and how he would have starved for rations or no one and snow; how he would through rivers and creeks. I have heard him tell how he would ask her they would come so near starving that they would go into the cornfields and take the fox had been thrown, and there they would pick up the scattered grains to keep themselves from starving. I think he said he was at the surrender of Lord Cornwallis. I married him without asking a consultant.

My husband was born in ninety-one, as well as I can remember. Mr. Cloud was a fine, sensible man, and was well respected by all who knew him. He was a member of the Baptist church and one of the court for forty years. He was high sheriff of the county for a long time. He and his deathbed he was strong-minded, port and active.

He died in 1841, on the 8th day of February, and was buried on the 10th day of the same month. He was born on the 22d day of February, 1791, and was 50 years old when he died. He was a good home and a right smart bit of property. He was acquainted with General Washington, and thought he would make a good President. He was in the battle of Yorktown and I could. He was the best boy I ever saw. He was always kind to his parents and I have been gone from me about twenty-three years. I have been a widow woman ever since. I have been offered a home with my children, and I went to better about my husband to my son to be sent to you, but it got lost and never came to the hands.

NANCY CLOUD.

the widow of William Cloud.

From the statement of her husband's age and her own made by Mrs. Cloud it will be seen that she was twenty-three and he was eighty-six at the time of their marriage.

Much closer was the relation of Elizabeth Betz, of Harrisburg, Pa., to her spouse, Peter Betz. These two made one in 1847. Peter Betz had reached by that period the mature age of forty-four. Peter must have been quite sprightly. A singular thing about the pensioner is that she has forgotten the English tongue and now can only speak the language of Germans—of the people among whom she lives. Mrs. Betz is deaf and her memory is rapidly failing.

Though eleven years older than Mrs. Betz and one of the centenarians on the list, Mrs. Anna Marie Young, another Pennsylvania widow, can recall her husband's memories of the darkest period of the war. He was Lieut. Jacob Young, of the Pennsylvania line. He settled in Easton when peace was declared, married there, of course years afterward, and his wife and widow has lived there ever since. She still faintly remembers her husband's story of the miseries of Valley Forge.

When the semi-centennial events of the revolution were in process of celebration, when Bunker Hill monument was dedicated in 1825 and the surrender of Yorktown commemorated at each of the stops in 1827, veterans of the conflict were so few and so aged as to be objects of special veneration. The grizzled old grand army men who turn out now on Memorial day are mere lads to what those old soldiers were. They were, in short, honored relics of another era, borne with care and set with pride upon the altar of liberty at corner stone layings and the like operations of the committed half century of the republic's life.

Yet one Samuel Dunham, of the Connecticut militia, selected as the fiftieth anniversary of the declaration year by taking unto himself a girlish wife. This was in 1826.

So prospered the union that about the widow's home, now in Manchester, Ontario county, N. Y., five thirty of her children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren. She is eighty-seven years old and bears the quaint name Asenath.

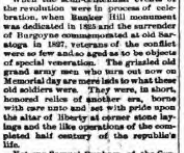
Both the children and grandchildren of the numerous progeny of the pair are alive. Almeda Dunham, the boss, lives with his grandchildren, the grandchildren at Manchester. Mrs. E. Leigh, the daughter, lives at West Bloomfield, N. Y.

Here is a contemporaneous of the time when Cornwallis was surrendering the sword of Gen. Lincoln, who went down to parole Gates' blunders.

Mrs. Mercy Smalley, of Neyman, Ill., is the youngest of the two husband-second widows. She was married to her husband in 1832, and has had the longest widowhood of any of the nineteen widows. Her husband, Jonathan Smalley, was a Rhode Islander, and that his service was done in a South Carolina regiment. In the ranks of the other old ladies revolutionary memories stumble up against reminiscences of all sorts, from Bunker Hill's badges to Lincoln's emancipation decrees. They are too feeble to celebrate the one from the other.

Sarah Dabney, of Surry, Illinois, Mrs. Esther Dye, of East Barnard, Vt., was Abel Morse, of the Connecticut troops. Mrs. Patty



ONE OF THE ANSWERS.

Richardson, who also lives in Vermont, at East Bethel, married in Godfrey Richardson, a soldier of the Revolution of York yeomanry who under Schuyler and old Herkimober and Arnold beat off Burgoyne and his Indian allies in their desperate effort for the mastery of the Hudson.

Mrs. Mary Sneed, of Parksley, Va., must have married her husband, Capt. Bowden Sneed, of Virginia, when he was nearly old enough to grandfather her father. Being only seventy-six now, she was not born until after the war of 1812 has been concluded—annually, in the year 1816. She was not of a marriageable age till 1832, when his hero of that war was obtaining the second term in the presidency. For her husband was a commissioned officer he must have been more than a youth when the revolutionary war ended, and of a very advanced age by the year say 1833, when his bride had reached the saccharine period of sixteen.

When Sarah Dabney's husband, John G. Dabney, fought with the Virginia troops, the site of the town of Surry, Ill., where Sarah lives now, was somewhere on the frontier of that same state of Virginia. It was probably within the military government of that chief of forgotten bottoms, Capt. George Rogers Clark, who conquered the whole middle northwest, who held an imperial frontier for years with two companies of men, who, when presented in his pauperized old age with the empty sleeve of a sword by the state of Virginia, broke the bauble with his crutch and cried: "I want bread, not a toy!"

Strange reading this is a story which relates how the federal government cares today for the old women whose very faces in their gilded days caught the doting eyes, the senile fancies, of the old men whose young lives had been risked in its defense.

The republic is grateful, but some times its gratitude "gets mixed."

THE MAN OF FASHION.

How He Will Disport Himself in New Style Bathing Garments.

What a Bathing Outfit Consists of and Costs—Some Marvelous Changes in Styles of Underwear—Shirts for Bicycling, Bicycling, Etc.

(COPYRIGHT, 1892.)

Bathing suits will be worn shorter this year. This is the startling news to the fair sex, but as it is intended solely for the men of fashion, with whom it has no effect, save in shortening terms," the shock in the first sentence must be forgiven, as it was altogether unintentional.

But in saying that bathing suits will be worn shorter I have reference only to the lower half. They are very often worn many an ungainly knee. This year they can be worn cut to just above the knee, or just below, and the shape of a man's limbs will have much to do with his choice. As a rule anyone can exercise good judge of his own physique. It might be well to ask a friend for advice.

Bathing suits will be worn as tight as ever. This is another bit of agreeable information for the host of well-shaped men who enjoy the two or three months in the year during which they can display themselves on the sands of Manhattan Beach, Long Branch, Newport, Atlantic City, in garments so close-fitting that every individual "airport" remains multitude shut their eyes for fear of a break. But society permits this lavish show of figure, in fact encourages it, and so the man of fashion has simply to bow obeisance and pose.

When you buy your bathing outfit this year be sure and do it properly. Buy them in one piece of worsted or silk, and if you are stout get vertical stripes, and if you are thin follow the Sing Sing design. That is very much in style this year. Just as it was last year. But you can get them in cotton very cheaply; and while that class of goods is all the go in Bowery and at South Beach it will hardly do at the swell ocean resorts. Pick out three or four pretty bathing suits costing you all the way from three dollars to thirty dollars and spices and then get a good outfit to go with it. A fine waterproof canvas satchel for two dollars will hold your bathing suit, socks, towels, your bowl robe, brushes, combs, and possibly a bath mat and a rather thin blanket also. Don't fail to get the Turkish towel robe, for it is a very handy thing after a fine plunge, even though it casts no spell of romance about. Pick out three blanket robe, if you intend having one this year, for worth ten or fifteen dollars. Then, too, there is the bath strap, which you ought to have. This will cost you two dollars and fifty cents. Then buy a few extra brushes and "rubbing down pads," and you are fixed for the summer as far as bathing outfit goes.

One of the finest bathing outfits ever prepared in New York was that which Lispenard Stewart took with him to Japan. It appears that he had heard of some excellent bathing in that country of little men and women, and so he gave his orders for a regular fashionable Ostend outfit which consists of both complete bathing suits of the finest spun silk, each of which will show his figure off to perfection, and no more of which are exactly alike as to design. His whole outfit, so I am told by a gentleman who met him while there, cost the purchases of all the supplementary material, such as bath robes, etc., one him fully four hundred dollars, but he will startle the natives over in Japan, and that is worth two thousand dollars to the ex-state senator.

I have recently delved into late styles for gentlemen's underwear, and have discovered a number of interesting facts. Shirts for morning wear have the bosom and cuffs rendered fancy in black and dark blue, as well as in blue-grey and other light tints, but the first two for preference. Still the liberty, equality and the fraternity of good, plain linen is everywhere predominant. A new shirt for riding folk has been brought out which, in place of the usual flaps fore and aft, is a sailor would say, buttons down the sides, and from a point about half way down to the knee is cut much like a pair of trousers, so as to fit close to the body. This is an undoubted advantage to those who are long in the waist, as it effectually prevents the shirt puckering up and galling the body. Square-cut cuffs are still the order of the day, and for dress shirts the new stud of two holes remains unchanged, either one or two at pleasure, the single-stud having been set by in favor.

Shirts for night wear are evidently giving way to pajamas. This night garment is strongly recommended by some of the medical faculty, and the night shirt may become as old fashioned as stocks and cravats, fob pockets or Wellington boots. Some of the pajama suits are very attractive and expensive garments. In one store on Broadway there are some of silk which would have satisfied a sybarite. They were of spun silk in half-inch stripes and well-contrasted colors, pink and white, a light golden yellow and pink, a full blue and rich bronze, and at the knees and waists were cords of white silk and tassels.

The "corduroy" is chiefly used for loose tennis shirts, which this season show an endless variety in material and design. The mixture of silk and cotton is specially happy, the silk doing all the talking, and the cotton remaining in the background as inferior ought to do. The silk appears itself in stripes, double checks, hair lines and sometimes in combs, then, which nothing can be softer or more gracious. Mad is a favorite color for these tennis shirts, which run the range in athletics. The most fashionable Oxfords are at present in demand—merely a fad—as Oxford requisite dressing to them, but still fashionable. In the blue shade all Oxfords will be in great demand, judging by the stock laid in, for sporting men. Helio-trope is certainly an exclusive color, but it is becoming widespread with the dome much to attain this result. The colors named are softened down by a very fine white diagonal line checking.

In underclothing a year very pronounced designs in stripes will be the month. In silk and cotton a soft blend is an eccentric idea. The weaving is done one day, and the design is in sets of rings of three stripes, which continue and round the garment, giving to the body a very pleasing appearance, except when the colors clash, and those of that "venomous insect—black or brown, with yellow, I mean.

The black silk pajama suits have been taken up gingerly. They are very handsome, but the wearer of them or bodice looks well worked large on the breast. I saw a beautifully silk suit of these going home to a Fifth avenue swell, who had seen a friend in a sulk, and the monogram under a crown was worked in ruddy red hair. A look of hair had been sent to the cutter to have the finishing worked in. It was told from the head of a well-known youthful society girl, given as a gage d'amitie—she is too young as yet for a gage d'amour.

In the matter of dress shirts the situation is practically unchanged, although some of the best outfitters are producing some exquisitely embroidered designs. These are in narrow styles. There is the narrow design on each edge of the button line, very light and closely worked. There is the broken line of dots all over the front, each dot most beautifully worked; there is the single line of sprigs on one side only, and there is, the most—stealing of all, the horizontal lines in a small Greek design.

There is evidently a determination to have the evening shirt conform in the into men's clothing all over, and the shirt will have to follow suit. I remember long ago when lace bosoms were worn by the beau of the day and the frill was still in existence. To elderly men the latter was very becoming, but it became professional and went out of the running. You got to associate it with a bland manner and a tap of a gold snuff box.

The bath robe, also, is a growing feature in many houses. To one who has had a bathroom opening from it there would be no great need of a bathrobe, though even then it would be very useful and comfortable; but as such accessories are rather scarce and people of all sorts and conditions refuse to enjoy a bath, the robe is found to be almost a necessity. One can remain in one's room, don the all-enveloping garment—with trousers and slippers to match, if desired—and go comfortably through halls and stairways to and from the place of ablution. After the bath the robe is useful for carrying to the Turkish stuff, of which the gowns are chiefly made, is both wholesome and agreeable.

I saw a very neat dressing gown in plain, dark green, rich buffalo, with a reverse of scarlet flannel. The roll collar and cuffs are in scarlet twill silk, quilted. Of course, no lining is required in connection with these cloths, and the set is thereby improved.

CARING FOR THE SICK.

The Admirable Ambulance System of Paris.

How Persons Afflicted with Contagious Diseases are Cared for in the Hospitals—Two Views of the Ve hicles Employed.

The ambulances of the de Stael and Chaligny Street stations in Paris have four wheels provided with rubber tires, and are drawn by one horse. The carriage is rounded in the interior, and the sheet-iron sides are painted, and varnished. They contain a flexible metallic seat for the nurse and a litter for the patient. A rubber tube permits of communication with the driver. They include no drawers for the carriage of the clothing and bedding of the patient. Each of these vehicles is supplied with a disinfecting station. In winter they are heated with cylinders of hot water.

Each of these vehicles is capable of carrying one adult patient or two children afflicted with the same contagious disease. The nurse sits beside the driver, who must keep the key of his pocket; but the door can be opened from the inside. So no one can accidentally open it by inadvertence.

The litter put in use in the ambulance is of canvas, and is jointed, so that the patient can be either seated or placed in a reclining posture without any fear to be declining posture without any fear to be declining posture. It is arranged with arm-chair for descending stairways, and as a bed for an indefinite period. The valid rests on a cushion of pure horse hair, which can be passed through the stove of an indefinite period.

The patient having been brought downstairs, the legs of the litter are placed in the rollers designed to facilitate its introduction or removal through rails arranged in the vehicle. The litter is then pushed in and fastened and varnished. Apertures are punched in the bottom of it, in order to give it greater lightness. The child in a litter in the form of a hand barrow is used. official permits her to assure herself of the contagious character of the disease. If the diagnosis is to be supported, the valid is forwarded to the service designed for this category of patients.

The ambulance must not stop at any point of its travel under any pretext whatever. As soon as it has deposited the patient at the hospital, it must return to the station, where it first enters the yard set apart for disinfection. This operation is effected by means of a fluid projected by a vaporizer. The outer clothing of the nurse and driver are placed in the disinfecting stove. The ambulance and its litter are afterward placed in the vapor house. The nurse, before retiring to her apartments, enters a room where she makes her toilet with disinfecting liquids, and takes care not to neglect to brush her hands and nails with care.

These precautions, as might be expected, are becoming better and better appreciated. Few cities today present so ingenious and complete a plant for the prevention of contagious diseases.

THE NATIONAL DEMOCRATIC CONVENTION.

The National Democratic Committee, at a meeting held in the city of Washington, D. C., has appointed Tuesday, the 21st day of June, 1892, as the time, and chooses the City of Chicago as the place for holding the national Democratic convention. Each State is entitled to a representation therein equal to double the number of the representation to which it is entitled in the next electoral college, and each territory and the District of Columbia shall have two delegates. All Democratic conservative citizens of the United States, irrespective of past political associations and differences, who can unite with us in the effort for pure, economical and constitutional government, are cordially invited to join us in sending delegates to the convention.

CALVIN S. BRICE, Chairman.
SIMON P. SHERRIN, Secretary.

THE VOICE OF THE PEOPLE.

Having more than once editorially advocated the nomination of Grover Cleveland as the next Democratic candidate for President, it is with sincere pleasure we applaud the action of the recent State Convention of Trenton.

In naming Mr. Cleveland as its first choice, and instructing the appointed delegates to vote as a unit for him at Chicago, the Convention voiced the emphatic sentiment of the Democracy of New Jersey.

There is no question about that.

The fact is apparent, that ex-President Cleveland has to-day a following not only of the Democratic masses throughout this State and the United States, but of the Independent voters, those many thousands of discriminating citizens who value fitness for office and sound governmental policy far higher than mere partisanship.

His four years official service as President is an unblemished record. His administration of public affairs was clean-handed and practically efficient from beginning to end.

He is able and honest.
Devoid of hypocrisy.
Clear of intrigue.
Bold to advocate, conscientious to perform, and ever vigilant at the post of duty.
Vox populi is for CLEVELAND.

MC KINLEY PROTECTION.

Among the numerous wrongs inflicted upon the people and the business interests of this country by the Republican tariff act of the last Congress, was the extravagant and needless duty levied by it on tin plate.

To enormously tax the users of an essential article, and at the same time cripple by taxation an important and growing branch of American industry, fruit and vegetable canning, cannot be justified. It is alien to sound business principles and economic honesty.

It was demanded by certain bounty seekers as a reward for financial and other partisan services rendered.

For them it may be ill spoken gain, but for the people it is rank extortion.

The tariff is a tax.

Since the McKinley tariff went into effect three or more canning factories in West Jersey have been compelled to stop work because of the high tax on tin, the business being thereby made unprofitable.

Consequently, legitimate enterprise is blocked, labor deprived of just employment, and farmers of a desirable market.

Save the people from such protection!

OUR DELEGATE.

Politically, as in other relations of life, men are at times, either through ignorance or design, wrongfully accused. We are led to speak thus because the name of our worthy fellow citizen and delegate-elect to the Democratic National Convention at Chicago, Joseph W. Yates, by some means or other, got posted into the public records as a "doubtful" Cleveland supporter.

Such designation has no foundation in truth when applied to a man like Mr. Yates. There is nothing doubtful about him. He was a zealous Cleveland advocate eight years ago, and to-day waives not in fidelity to the distinguished ex-President as a proposed Democratic candidate for re-election.

Mr. Yates is a life-long and principle-swayed Democrat, conscientious in the formation of his own judgment and the discharge of every duty. He seeks no political emolument for himself, being alone ambitious to advance national renown and secure for all the people the blessings of good government. In the keeping of such a delegate the public welfare and the interests of Democratic party can be safely placed. The New York Evening Post justly remarks: "Mr. Yates was a Cleveland elect or in 1884, is not a man to allow anyone else to form his decisions for him, and he had no difficulty, before his district caucus, in showing that he is the kind of Cleveland man who does not require instructions."

It looks now as though a halt would be called against the coal barons, who have so audaciously combined to consolidate the prominent railroads in the interest of coal monopoly and to fix the price of coal. Gov. Abbett justly refused to sign the bill which gave them such unlimited power, and now Attorney-General Stockton of this State has rendered an opinion against the Reading combine. He says the common law is violated and the people's rights mocked. He has presented an application to Chancellor Alex. T. McGill for an injunction restraining the carrying out of the scheme of the Reading combine in any of its parts. Like the warning of the entire press of the State, he says "halt." The injunction has been granted and we shall soon see whether the combine is greater than the legal power of the State. All hail John F. Stockton and Chancellor McGill.

The next convention of the Republican party will be held at Minneapolis, commencing June 7, and the following information in regard to rates and arrangements for the transportation of visitors will be of interest to our readers:

The North-Western line will sell excursion tickets to Minneapolis and return at the very low rate of one fare for the round trip, and will provide the best of facilities for the transportation of delegates and visitors.

Three superbly appointed trains are run over this line between Chicago and Minneapolis.

WOMEN FOUGHT OVER THE GAME.

Vowed Their Opponents With Buckets of Water, and Belabored One Another With Parasols.

An exciting game of base-ball took place between the Actives of Stony Hill and the Basking Ridge team on the grounds of the latter, Decoration Day. Much interest was taken in the game by the friends of both clubs, it being a return game. A large crowd gathered to see the contest. The feelings of the "lady friends" of the home team reached a climax in the sixth inning, when the Actives made eight runs and shut out the home team. There were several pails of water for the use of the players and public. The young ladies of the Ridge showed their chagrin by throwing the water on the visiting team's "lady friends." As they cheered, one young lady from Newark, a friend of the Actives, broke her parasol over the head of a young man from Bernardsville and tried to stop her from showing her delight at the defeat. That young man spent the rest of the afternoon sitting on a stone beside a spring, bathing the back of his head. It is said to be about the size of an egg, and thus lost interest in the rest of the game.

The main features of the game were 10 two-base hits, by Robert Clark, and a hit by Richard Rogers by which he made a home run, the only run in the seventh inning. The score:

Actives	0 3 0 3 0 1 1 2 0—10
Basking Ridge	0 0 3 0 0 0 1 2 1—10

Struck out—By Burk, 13; by Whitenack, 7.

Memorial Day at South Plains.

Memorial Day was observed at South Plains, in the morning, by the members of G. A. R. resident of the town, assisted by the chief of the fire department and delegations from Excelsior Hook and Ladder company, No. 1, and Basket and Engine company, No. 1, of the village. The public school was represented by a number of girls from the primary department, under the leadership of Miss Lulu Robinson and Miss Alice Johnson. The line of march was formed at Excelsior hall, headed by the band corps. From there they proceeded to the cemetery. The service at the cemetery was opened by a prayer from the Rev. Dr. Parks, which expressed the sentiments of those assembled to pay tribute to the departed heroes. After the girls from the school had strewn the beautiful supply of beautiful flowers upon the last resting place of the departed soldiers, and a tribute was given to the unknown dead, the Rev. Mr. Morning of the M. E. church gave a short and very appropriate address. The closing prayer was given by the Rev. Mr. Fulleraway of Philadelphia, and showed that he felt very much that he was in the midst of the line of march was resumed, back to Excelsior hall, where the firemen were dismissed. This ended the day's ceremony. The formal assembling of the people of the village for a memorial service had its awakening influences. With a few exceptions, business was generally suspended. The general impression was that the services passed off in good order. It is to be hoped that on the return of the day next year there will be a larger turnout by all.

FOUGHT OFF A NEGRO BRUTE.

A Pan-ased Servant Girl Bravely Defended by a Dog.

A pretty servant girl in the employ of E. M. Kempshall of Fanwood had a startling experience a night or two ago. She was walking from the station to Mr. Kempshall's house, at about 9 o'clock, and was passing near C. H. Smith's lumber yard, when a big burly negro accosted her and attempted an assault. The girl screamed for help, and Mr. Kempshall's big dog came bounding to her rescue. With a fierce growl he sprang upon the negro, and failed him to the ground. A fierce battle ensued between the negro brute and the noble animal. The dog soon overpowered the human and stood over his prostrate body snarling and showing his teeth. Meanwhile the girl had retreated to a safe distance, and in response to her calls the dog reluctantly left the negro and joined her. The girl gave the alarm for the capture of the fellow as soon as she reached the house, and the wretch escaped.

A Plainfielder Goes to Build a Village in the Wilderness.

Joseph E. Moran and family of Franklin place, have left this city for a stay of several weeks in the Adirondacks. Mr. Moran is the engineer of the Tide Water Oil company, a branch of the Standard Oil company. He goes to build a village and refinery in Clinton Co. property of Benson Mines, St. Lawrence county, in the Adirondack wilderness. The site was chosen a year ago and covered with the original forest. The first thing Mr. Moran is going to do, is to put in systems of water supply and sewerage on the Plainfield plan, and the houses built will all be connected with both systems. The camp has already 200 inhabitants, according to state census taken last winter.

Somerville vs. Zulu Cadets.

George W. Cadmus, the Plainfield ball player, a son of W. H. H. Cadmus, a member in the tax office and a well-known Somerville resident, has been appointed to a place in the navy yard in Brooklyn as assistant engineer, at $1,000 a year. He is a graduate of Cornell university and graduated high on the Civil Service list after examination. He will devote himself to business, now, and drop base-ball.

VICTORY OUT OF DEFEAT.

PLAINFIELD LOSES A GAME, THEN WINS IT HOMELY.

Bowden Was Set in Form, and Westfield Relieves Walked to First on His Erratic Pitching—But in Spite of Handicap the Crescents Found the Ball Around the Lot and Win by Tremendous Batting and Earned Field Work.

The crescent, that symbol worn on the helmet of a Plainfield ball player, is in its ascendancy. Thursday evening, just after the Plainfielders sent the Westfield team home from defeat, the faintest rim of a silver moon gleamed down from the western horizon, emblematic of the setting of Westfield's day and the triumph of the Crescent city boys. Since then that dainty curve of silver has waxed and grown until now the new moon has attained a glorious size, and reigns queen of the midnight heavens till after morning has relieved to red. Just so has the Plainfield crescent augmented itself until now its possibilities in the base-ball realm are boundless, and throughout the eastern western horizon, emblematic of the setting of Westfield's day and the triumph of the Crescent city boys. Just so has the Plainfield crescent augmented itself until now its possibilities in the base-ball realm are boundless, and throughout the eastern horizon, emblematic of the setting of Westfield's day and the triumph of the Crescent city boys. The game at Westfield, Saturday, was Westfield's at the outset, and at the end of Westfield's ninth at the second inning the Plainfield contingent turned sick with dismay, for the score and the prospects were overwhelmingly against them. Even genial manager Keller lost his wonted cheerfulness, and gallant pitcher Bowden was kicking himself all over the lot. For Bowden was wild as a hawk, and every body said that something collapse had lost the Crescents the game.

To save his life, Bowden couldn't get the ball over the plate. The consistency of one was the strange way Westfield has of elevating its pitcher's box higher than the rubber at home, but the main trouble was that much of Bowden's speed was cleaning had temporarily left his good right arm.

Two base-on balls, two hits, a wild pitch, and a fumbled throw Westfield forces runs as a starter. Again, in the third, two bases on balls, two errors, and three hits, scored four more. The Westfield crowd was hysterical with joy, and the brightly-uniformed brass band blew exultant blasts on their trumpets. But Westfield was to score not again.

"Boys," said Sneeden to his fellow-Crescents, as they came in from the field —"they've got a big lead, but they shan't get anything more except goose-eggs." He hit the ball as close to the plate as I can, and I'm not afraid but the field will shut them out."

The Crescents had secured two runs, in the second inning, by two hits, aided by errors, but their half of the third opened with the score 8 to 2 against them.

"Now, then," said Captain Sid Hofford, "we'll bat out a victory. Hes me hit the ball, and follow my example."

The slugging match that followed will go down to posterity as one of the greatest things in base-ball history. Hofford banged the second ball pitched, and easily reached first. Keeler sent the ball over the left-field fence, scoring Hofford. Murphy hit for a single, and stole second while Keeler rested on third. Then Turner pulled a daisy-bounder to the plate. He swung his agate-tongue but to meet the first ball thrown. Spang! The sphere went sailing upwards till it looked like a meteor just escaped from the sky. It sailed and sailed away, as gracefully as a bird, till it diminished to a speck of dust and vanished beyond the right-field fence. The wondering crowd watched it vanish, and broke into wild hurrahs. At last reports the ball had not yet been found. It is sighted by telescope at Perth Amboy a half-hour after Keeler, Murphy and Turner sauntered across the plate. The probabilities are that the ball is still sailing along through space, the nebulae for a new world, of which Turner is the creator.

Well, that was n't glory enough for one inning, but Leidy must needs bang out a smashing three-bagger, and Bonner a single, which brought in Leidy, while Bowden with a sacrifice helped Bonner score.

Six runs—all earned—and the score was 7 to 2 was enough to give a Plainfield man heart disease, and a Westfielder the jaundice. And after that the Crescents walked right away from the deep dark hole out of which they had pulled themselves, and piled up seven more runs as easy as rolling off a log, though O'Neil was retired and favorite Charlie Hamilton succeeded him.

Sneeden continued wild, but the field backed him up so nobly that Westfield got never another run. The band sat down through the rest of the game, and did n't play even a dirge when 'twas over. The score:

Base-Ball Chatter.

The Crescents have added J. J. Murphy to their list of players. He's a good one.

What a great game Saturday's will be between Plainfield and Elizabeth, for first place!

The Crescent Leagues is building wings to its grand-stand behind the center-field. The seats will accommodate 500 more, and with second deck will hold 1,000, and will be on sale before each game at 50 cents.

Although Cadmus has proved a failure as a pitcher, the West Side ball-player has never relented his love for field base. He had seven strikes inflicted on him in Detention Dog's game, and hit a single and a two-bagger.

Plainfield Defeats Somerville.

The Plainfield and Somerville baseball clubs played a game of base-ball on the Plains. The Stars won the game in the fifth inning by batting out seven runs. Somerville had the best of the game, but errors were in the game. The players of the Scotch Plains thought that they would have a picnic, but they soon found out that they had to play ball. They got the nine runs that they scored. The feature of the game was the heavy batting of O. Sandtke, who made two home runs and a three-bagger. He played the good playing of the rest of the team. W. Miller, the pitcher of the Terrigine team knocked out of his box in the fifth inning by the Stars.

DEAD BY HIS OWN HAND.

A Prideful Misfortune Visits the Home of the VanAukens.

Calvin E. VanAuken, a resident of Westervelt avenue, committed suicide, Sunday afternoon, by cutting his throat with a razor. He had been quite ill of pneumonia for six months, through continued illness, and was very despondent. His wife and daughter had been watching him some time, for fear he would do himself bodily harm. During the day he had been reading his Bible and had gone out for a pleasant stroll. Soon as his wife and daughter left him alone he went to the kitchen, took out a razor, and stood before a looking-glass and cut his throat. The gash was a terrible one. Then he stood holding it open and letting the blood run into the sink until so weak that he had to fall to the floor, still holding open the wound. He bled until there was scarcely an ounce of blood left in his body, which was found by the horror-stricken women five minutes after they had left him.

County Physician Westcott viewed the remains and issued burial permit. The funeral was held at the home of Mr. Baker, Mrs. VanAuken's mother, Westfield.

The case is a most pitiful one. Misfortune had evidently turned the poor man's brain, for he was a most devoted husband and father.

EXPLODED IN HIS HANDS.

A Blazing Lamp Destroys a Valley Brook Home.

John Wolfe, who lived near Stiles's sawmill in Washington Valley, was burned out of house and home at 8 o'clock Sunday evening. A lamp that he was carrying exploded, and the blazing oil was scattered in all directions. Wolf had only time to save himself. He was painfully burned. The house and all its contents were destroyed. His goods were insured for only $300. The building was insured for $800. Its owner was F. J. Neiral, Dunellen street, North Plainfield. The light of the fire was plainly seen in this city.

Lake Hopatcong.

This beautiful resort, situated but a few hours' ride from New York city, and nestling among the mountains of Morris and Sussex counties of this State, was visited by hundreds of people on Decoration Day, May 30, to enjoy the delightful air and scenery and to follow the example of that ancient disciple of fishermen, Izaak Walton. The fishing grounds of the lake are more delightful and pleasant this season than ever before. The Central railroad company have beautified and improved their picturesque station at the station, so that it will be more than ever attractive to picnic and excursion parties. The dancing platform has also been greatly enlarged, and a new floor laid. This company is doing everything in their power to make the place attractive, and give reduced rates on important occasions. The fishing this year is far better than in many years previous. There were some enormous catches on May 30, and the season promises to be an enjoyable one to the angler.

A Fair Warning.

Complaints are made that small and large boys of wealthy parents of this city are in the habit of shooting song and insectivorous birds with their deadly Flobert rifle and slung-shot. We have repeatedly warned against the use of such all others, that the penalty for this cruelty is severe, and have published the law in full for their benefit. Here is a section of it:

"The penalty for killing any song or insectivorous bird, or taking or destroying eggs of such birds, is $50 for each offence."

There is yet another State law which imposes a heavy fine upon the person selling a male under sixteen years of age any firearm, and also imposes a penalty upon the boy so carrying or using such fire-arm. Again we give warning to parents to stop the cruelty during and to their children in the above matter or it may result disastrously to them financially. It is a burning shame that our beautiful song birds should be so ruthlessly destroyed, as has been reported.

In Memory of Dead Heroes.

Decoration Day was quietly observed by the Plainfield G. A. R. posts in accordance with the programme of exercises published in these columns. Public memorial services were held, and the graves of departed comrades were adorned with flags and strewn with flowers. Mayor D. I. Saunders of the borough made a brief but impressive memorial address in the Presbyterian cemetery, and the Rev. Wm. H. Hanner delivered an oration before Major Anderson members and friends. Leaf's school cadets were a feature of the brief parade. The day was a general holiday throughout the city.

Shooting.

The fifth contest for prizes offered by the New Jersey Trap Shooters' league will be held on the grounds of the South Side Gun club, at Newark, Saturday, June 11. The Independent Gun club of Plainfield has won three out of the four previous contests. This club will not put forth its strongest team at the coming contest.

The Body Brought Home.

Brakeman Chamberlain, who was killed at Elizabeth Monday, was thirty-two years old, married, and lived with his brother-in-law, J. C. Miller, Manning avenue, Plainfield. The body was taken to Jensen's morgue, and kept Tuesday. Westcott investigated the accident and gave a permit for the removal of the body to the bereaved home in Plainfield.

The druggists' dinner at Hotel Netherwood Wednesday night was a success. Proprietor Miller had prepared a sumptuous feast, which was duly relished. A Cool Retreat From Summer Heat.

A characteristic feature of the Eden Musee is the eminent respectability of its audiences. Not a shred of taint which is maintained in all that is produced upon the pretty stage. This makes it a resort particularly satisfying to the refined and cultured populace. This popularity has greeted the New American Historical gallery, where great events are depicted in a most entertaining and spectacular manner. The Eden Musee is one of the coolest resorts in the city during the heated months. Magician Powell and the fantastic Majilton form a combination of rare ability. Grand concerts are a daily feature of the entertainment.

Institutes and Injunctions.

The unexplained success of ALLCOCK'S Ponous Plasters as an external remedy has induced unprincipled parties to collect imitations, which they endeavor to sell on the reputation of ALLCOCK'S. It is no security to speak of them as "just as good." Genuine ALLCOCK'S have "Allcock's Porous Plaster" on the face of each plaster. Their power is not surpassed by facts that establish superiority or equality with ALLCOCK'S. Injunctions restraining druggists and dealers from selling imitations of ALLCOCK'S Porous Plasters are the best collection remedy for Plasters. Beware of imitations, and do not be deceived by substitution, or accept an explanation. Send 25c. for collection or exposure. Allcock & Co., Boston.

YATES AND NEVINS.

PLAINFIELD HONORED BY BOTH DISTRICT DELEGATES.

Some of Her Leading Citizens and the President of the Street Railway Company, Chosen to Help Nominate Grover Cleveland—How They Were Feasted for Its Energy and Convention.

(From The Press of May 26)

In the press dispatches published elsewhere in this issue are given the details of the enthusiastic and harmonious convention at Trenton yesterday.

The platform adopted reaffirms the devotion of the New Jersey Democracy to the principles laid down in the National Democratic platforms of 1884 and 1888, and asserts that the Democratic party should continue its battle for tariff reform until that reform is embodied in the statutes of the United States. The platform further denounces the McKinley bill, arraigns the Harrison Administration for extravagance, and endorses the Administration of Gov. Abbett, giving him deserved credit for increasing the revenues of the State. The two important planks are:

Resolved, That with a full recognition of the responsibility of the Democracy of New Jersey toward the national Democracy, we name as our candidate for the Presidency the statesman who has been the acknowledged chief in the war of tariff reform, and to emphasize our preference and insure our delegation we cast the vote of the State for Grover Cleveland as long as his name is before the Convention.

Resolved, That we condemn the policy of free coinage of depreciated local tender silver, and favor such additional issue of silver bullion under the Republican legislation of 1890, and we believe that the whole matter of the use of silver as a money metal should be remitted to the future consecrated action of the commercial world.

The selection of the Hon. Joseph W. Yates of this city, and Thomas Nevins of Orange, president of the Plainfield Street Railway company, as delegates at large from the eighth congressional district, to the National Democratic convention, is a great honor to Plainfield, and her representatives in the Democratic convention yesterday richly deserve the thanks of the Democrats of this city for the recognition and honors brought upon Plainfield by their efforts.

The Plainfield delegates that met in the Union county caucus at 10:30 yesterday, were: W. L. Force, Edward Conkling, Isaac Clark, Jacob Krisey and J. A. Demarest. The election of five additional delegates at large resulted in another Plainfielder being added —James E Martine who polled the highest vote of any chosen. His presence and power was what subsequently brought about the election of the Hon. Joseph W. Yates.

The caucus was presided over in a most able, just and satisfactory manner by the Hon. Thomas F. Lane of Summit, and he was eventually chosen chairman of the Union county delegation. When nominations were called for the choice of the county for district delegate to the National convention, the names of ex-prosecutor William R. Wilson, ex-Senator Frederick C. Marsh, the Hon. Joseph W. Yates were presented. At the request of Mr. Martine, Mr. Yates was allowed the privilege of making a personal explanation. He explained that during Mr. Lane's recent absence in Maine, doubts had been circulated among the county delegates as to whether Mr. Yates was a Cleveland man. Then on top of such doubts arose that was the rumor circulated Tuesday night that he had withdrawn. But Mr. Yates in his brief but vigorous, impressive and convincing speech before the caucus, thoroughly satisfied his friends who might have faltered in their allegiance, that he had not withdrawn and that he was still the same true Democrat who had voted for Tilden in the convention of 1876, and who had cast one of New Jersey's Cleveland votes that had made Grover Cleveland president in 1884.

In the interests of harmony, Senator Marsh's name was withdrawn, but a hard fight ensued between the friends of Messrs. Yates and Wilson followed. Ballot after ballot failed to elect. Twenty-three votes were necessary for a choice. When Yates stood within 20 but never got higher than 21. Yates had 18 on the first ballot and 17 against Wilson's 22 on the ballot before final one. Then Mr. Martine's masterful fine "Italian hand" with one fell swoop gathered in the five scattering votes and one of Wilson's, thus electing Mr. Yates by a total of 23 to Mr. Wilson's 21.

The choosing of Thomas Nevins was brought about in an entirely different way. The district comprises all of Union county, Bayonne and the Oranges. The Bayonne representatives had selected John Brady of that city as their choice for the other district delegate, and had undoubted got the promise of a number of Union county delegates to vote with them. But even after the convention had organized and in the open caucus, delegate Demarest urged the name of Mr. Nevins so strongly that the entire county delegation was won over, and Mr. Demarest was appointed to wait upon Mayor Fell of Orange, and confer with the Bayonne delegation in the interest of harmony. The latter, however, declined to withdraw Mr. Brady's name and said they would fight it out in the convention. This they were permitted to do with the result that Mr. Brady received 15 votes and Mr. Nevins 60—Union county casting her 44 votes solidly for him.

Mr. Yates's fight in the caucus was a peculiar one from the unusual circumstances surrounding it. He was, however, equal to the emergency and in his case fought a battle worthy of the cause. That fight is settled, but it is believed that Mr. Yates has still a reckoning day to come with those who are accused of planting to turn him down. But his speech of personal explanation before the caucus was most courteous, impassioned and manly. Mayor Fell's fight in the doubt of Mr. Yates being a Cleveland man, nor of his Democracy. In the Tilden convention he was one of the leaders in the anti-Tilden resolutions, and all Democrats remember yet the ringing strength, and wisdom, and glory of them. Mr. Yates is a personal friend of the ex-President, and in the caucus yesterday a letter to Mr. Yates from ex-Mayor Grace of New York, one of the strongest Cleveland men in the convention, was read in which earnest words of Mr. Yates's success were expressed.

ENSHROUDED IN DARKNESS.

Plainfield Disgraced in the Eyes of State Visitors, by Delinquent Street Lighting Service.

The Plainfield gas and electric company is again growing lax in its street lighting. Tuesday night the current was not turned into the street lamps till five minutes of 8, though it was dark half an hour before. After the lamps were lighted they shone with only a dull and feeble glow, and the visiting pharmacists driving about the city said: "Humph! Plainfield's streets and homes may be poorly lighted, but the street lighting service is disgraceful."

If The Press remembers aright, the street-lighting contract calls for good lights from sunset to sunrise, every night in the year. The sun set last night at 7:20. For such delinquencies as this, it is the common complaint, we do believe, of damages from the company's bills.

The officers and teachers of Trinity Reformed church Sunday-school met on Sunday last to hold their annual meeting. Hereafter the session will be held in the morning instead of the afternoon as heretofore.

ASCENSION DAY.

Meeting at Grace Church Yesterday Morning Attended by the Trinity Commandery of Knights Templar—Sermon by the Rev. Henry R. Barbour, of Trenton.

A quite large congregation and about fifty uniformed Knights Templar took part in the Ascension Day services held in Grace church. All joined heartily and listened to the very practical and effective sermon by the Rev. Mr. Barbour of Trenton. The preacher drew with keen lines the words from 1 Cor. xvi: 13—"Quit you like men; be strong". He spoke in part as follows:

"These words of St. Paul bring before us a subject proper at once to the present day and to the present occasion—the subject of Christian manhood. The organization for which we celebrate the service of this evening has been specially appointed, is certainly intended to produce, and if carefully tried to produce a high type of Christian manliness. And this day, the feast of the Ascension of Jesus Christ, is pre-eminently calculated to impress us with the dignity of Christian manhood, for the great significance of the Ascension was the taking of a perfect humanity into Heaven. It was the taking there of something which was of the earth earthy; something which of itself could never have merited, never have reached that heavenly dwelling, the longing of flesh into the Heaven of heavens."

"The exhortation of St. Paul just quoted contains some of the noblest words in the English language. 'Quit you like men; be strong'. No words are more forcible than 'men' and 'strong'. In their true significance they express all that is most inspiring to human nature. They recall the grandest deeds in human history; they suggest the noblest qualities of discriminating intellectable powers, and magnificent nobility of character. As we look into that book we remember not so much of nations, not so much of events, as of men. Nations and events are but the mere setting in which the gems of manhood are placed; and the lives of great men live on when nations are crumbled and forgotten.

"These words were written by an apostle and they therefore proclaim through the authority of divine inspiration the great truth to which your attention is now most earnestly asked, that the best heroism, the highest manliness, the noblest type of life can be found in the consistent profession of the religion of Him whose ascension we commemorate to-day. There is no other religion but this truth and 'who boldly tell us religion is unreasonable and unmanly. They sneer at its mysteries; they ridicule its doctrines; they point, alas! to dark places in its history."

Mr Barbour then inculcated, forcible language maintained that the position of those who attack the Christian religion is illogical. He said that all the knowledge we possess comes to us through the testimony of others. "For reason tells us that the witnesses are competent to speak, and that being granted we then receive what they say without question.

"But, further, it would seem to be a sufficient answer to those who would overthrow the religion of Christ, that they have nothing to offer in its place and us. They have nothing to offer in its place they ought to keep silence; until they have, they ought to gain no hearing. It is a fearful thing for any man to do, to go up and down and through the land trying to take away the only faith people have, and then coolly tell them they have nothing else to augment in its place.

"Finally, it is said of Christianity that it is unmanly. Now Christianity asks men to give up nothing that is for his own good or for the good of those around them. It calls upon him as a man to oppose what is against himself, his Maker and his God.

"Soldiers, I suggest to set before you the true manliness of the religion of Christ. Let us depend upon it that religion represents all that is best, that is manly, that is noble in spirit, in its doctrines, in its laws. Let us do what we can for others, to show a pure example, and to lead a high standard of morality. Let us serve well our Creator. Let us labor for the spread of his government and let us enroll ourselves as his soldiers and fight like heroes in the warfare and battle of life."

At the close of the sermon the Rev. E. M. Stedman said a few words to the men of the purposes of the organization, and also said that the collection would be devoted to sufferers in the West by the recent disasters there, the purposes of the organization being charitable.

WOMEN IN A RUNAWAY.

Bicycle and Carriage Collide, with Serious Results.—Who Was to Blame?

Mrs Loiseaux of Putnam avenue was driving down Elm place at 7 o'clock Tuesday night, just as Miss Sadie Addis, daughter of William Addis, the plumber, of Orange place, turned up Elm place to go into her residence street. Miss Addis was riding a bicycle, and wheeled directly into the path of Mrs. Loiseaux's horse. Whether the horse was running away or not is a disputed point, but it certainly was going too rapidly to permit of collision being avoided, and in a twinkling Miss Addis and her bicycle were inextricably entangled in the carriage wheels. There is no doubt as to whether the horse was running away after this point. Before the corner of East Front street was reached it was on a furious gallop. At the corner of Front street Mrs. Loiseaux was thrown out. She struck on her shoulder, and received most painful injuries. The carriage was overturned, and the horse was caught uninjured. Miss Addis was dragged the entire length of the block, and at first the bystanders thought she must be killed, but her injuries proved to be not so dangerous as feared. The bicycle was considerably damaged, but not beyond repair. Miss Addis's most painful injuries are severe fractures of bones in the foot.

Mrs Loiseaux is sufferint from a fractured leg and other injuries. Miss Addis has a sore foot her bruises that she cannot bear the touch of a finger. The bystanders who witnessed the affair were so unanimous in their opinions that they turned their backs in horror, thinking that both women would be killed. Mrs. Loiseaux is in the care of Dr. T. S. Davis. The case in that lit'erature is also dictated, making a very painful injury.

FELL FROM THE SCAFFOLD.

David Mills Badly Injured at the Irving Brown Residence.

A serious accident occurred at the new building to be occupied by Irving Brown, on Central avenue below Fifth street, Tuesday. David Mills, a carpenter employed by contractor John Abbott, fell fourteen feet to the ground, from a scaffold. He was very badly hurt, though the exact nature of his injuries is not yet reported. Four men carried him to a neighboring residence, where Dr. T. S. Tomlinson cared for him. Mills has a wife and five children at 105 Summit avenue.

EMERSON RETURNS.

His Eclectives Tried Him Out at Public Meeting.

Howard L. Emerson, whose mysterious disappearance caused so much excitement in his home friends, is home again, and the story he will tell was received from Philadelphia that he was ill and suffering in that city. His brother went on and brought him home. He is now at his father's residence, and cannot by his family, who are rejoiced at his return.

A PROSPEROUS CHURCH PAPER.

The Finder, the bright little paper published monthly by the Methodist ladies of the M. E. church, will enter on its fifth volume this month. The ages and stages of this publication are a rarity among church papers. It is full of interesting matter, fine illustrated heading and other improvements. From its columns are taken the following extracts of general interest:

Several Drew seminary students have preached very acceptably at Monroe Avenue chapel recently.

April 26, Geo. H. Stewart and Miss Philamena Fresher were married by the pastor at the parsonage.

The pastor preaches the Baccalaureate sermon at Bordentown Military Academy on Sunday, June 12.

Dr. Carroll will give an address concerning the General Conference on the evening of June 22 in the church.

June 12 will be Children's Day. Each of our Sunday-schools will have appropriate exercises on the afternoon of the above day.

All Plainfield rejoices over Dr. Hurlbut's return to the position he has held for the past four years. In his line of work he has no superiors.

Mrs. E. L. Hyde has been elected president of the Women's Home Missionary society. She is admirably qualified for the responsible position."

The Rev. W. F. Honeyman will preach the baccalaureate, May 29, in the Monroe Avenue chapel. He preached there most acceptably about one year ago.

The Monroe Avenue Epworth League has a most creditable meeting through the report of its president, Walter McGee, at the Epworth League anniversary.

May 5, Geo. Leighs and Miss Alice Stace were married by the pastor. The ceremony took place at the residence of the bride's parents, 263 West Third street.

George Irving, a new member and a young man, was received into full membership on our Brooklyn, led the devotional meeting of the Epworth League at Monroe Avenue chapel last Friday evening.

At the last regular meeting of the Epworth League, J. B. Joy was elected president, G. M. Rittenhouse, Miss Minnie French, Harry McGee, vice-presidents, Miss Hall, secretary, and Clarence M. Smith, treasurer.

After a long and very painful illness, Mrs. Margaret Roberts passed to her heavenly reward on the 27th of May. Her funeral was attended by a very large circle of friends who had known and loved her for many years.

Dr. Carroll will give an address in Park Place church next Sunday evening, May 29, on the General Conference. He visited a number of its sessions and is well qualified to give a very interesting and instructive talk upon that subject.

The anniversary of the Woman's Home Missionary society was an interesting occasion, although, owing to the time of the meeting, not very well attended. A paper by the secretary, Mrs. N. W. Pike, and an address by the Rev. J. S. Stone, M. D., were the features of the programme.

The General Conference has adjourned and all is known to history as the one in which there was the most talking and the least doing of any General Conference in the history of the church. It will take generations to discover any difference between the Discipline of 1888 and 1892.

When Mr. Jackson arose to open the Sunday-school on the first Sunday after his return from California, he was surprised at the simultaneous display of handkerchiefs all over the school. It was a beautiful symbol of welcome home, and was meant to include Mrs. Jackson as well.

Sunday evening, May 15, the third anniversary of the Epworth League was observed in the church by the young people's choir, with a high standard of music. The congregation was large, and the entire programme was very interesting. The new Park Place chapel choir led the singing. Messrs. Walter McGee, Rittenhouse and Youngson made short, appropriate addresses, and the part taken by six little members of the Junior League was one of the most pleasing features of the evening.

ALL IN THE FAMILY.

One Beebe Brother Wins the Tennis Championship, the Other Almost Wins It.

H. A. Beebe won the championship prize in the tournament of the Hillside Tennis club Monday, after a noble battle against his brother Howard.

The championship game was very close and exciting, and experts declare that the playing was the finest ever seen in Plainfield. The grounds were filled with a fashionable throng of spectators, and presented an animated and interesting scene.

In the preliminaries H. W. Beebe defeated I. H. Brown, 6—4, 6—4; R. L. Stevens defeated W. F. Storer by default. S. West worsted G. F. Mellick, 6—0, 6—0. S. S. Morrison and H. C. Adams were scheduled but did not play. D. C. Tiffany lost to J. P. Murray, 6—0, 6—2. H. Huntington won against G. H. Squires, 6—3, 6—1. R. A. Beebe was victorious over C. L. Goodrich, 6—4, 6—4. Mr. Patton won by default over J. H. P. Wharton.

Then H. W. Beebe met Walh and defeated him, 6—2, 6—4. S. West won by default over Morrison and Adams. Murray lost to Huntington, 13—0, 6—4. R. A. Beebe worsted Patton, 6—1, 6—0.

The contest was now narrowed down to four. H. W. Beebe defeated West, 6—3, 6—4, and R. A. Beebe defeated Huntington, 6—3, 6—3.

Great excitement attended the playing of the finals. The Beebe brothers, having outplayed all competitors, came to the front as the most brilliant playing, for the final victory, and amid much enthusiasm R. A. Beebe barely won.

The club-house and grounds have been greatly improved, and the appointments of the club are now well-nigh perfect. The first of a delightful series of afternoon teas will be held Saturday, at which the ladies and their families will have the privileges of the four fine tennis courts.

RARE VISION OF LOVELINESS.

That's What the Great-Greased Girls Presented on the Custer Stage.

A delightful entertainment was given at the Casino Friday night, and enjoyed by an audience that comfortably filled the hall. The readings by Miss Maude Agnes Bowers and Miss Gertrude Marchand were greatly appreciated.

Miss Bowers was especially good in her selection "Comin Thro' the Rye," which she rendered most excellently the emotional pains appropriate to the summons expressed to-day varying circumstances. They all were difficult, and all admirably done.

Miss Marchand was particularly good in "Gimme Fewers a Prowpos' Goodness," in which she depicted most faithfully the tale of a boy who had looked his fault-finding aunt up on the roof of the house during a drenching storm. Her imitation of a small boy's wail for the whooping-cough was also perfect.

All of the selections were in good taste, the pathos of a plaintive poetry alternating judiciously with laughter-provokers.

Both Miss Bowers and Miss Marchand were repeatedly recalled, and heartily floral testimonials of appreciation were presented to them.

The singing of Misses. Manton E. Parker, J. Chetwood Hines, William C. Bigelow and Archibald W. Mackintosh, was greatly enjoyed, as was also Miss Helen Sandcrook's piano playing.

The floor manager was Master Frere's veritable dream of beauty and a joy. Nine of Eve's loveliest daughters appeared in full Grecian costume in the presentation of Hoppe romaunts, poetic and historic scenes from old Greek life. Such a vision of loveliness has rarely shone forth beneath the rays of the penetrating calcium light as this which appealed so effectively to the fine artistic sense of a cultured audience. What scene was the best in bravery a measure of taste and originality; the eighth, with the Fates and the Graces, was probably the most beautiful; but in the judgment of many the picture of Bacchus and Bacchantes offered most possibilities for graceful posing and enrapturing expression. There was a fountain of Venus in the centre of the stage, in all the tableaux, and the scenes fairly revelled in the pictures of loveliness. The artists who rendered these conceptions so delightfully a success were: Misses Agnes Bowers, Miss Gertrude Marchand, Mrs. Lewis G. Timpson, Miss Grace Woodruff, Miss Allen Simpson, Miss Anne Murphy, Miss Caroline H. Bonnell, Miss Addie Jackson and Miss Annie Corlies.

SHALL PLAINFIELD WIN?

Of Course, but Her Pathfinderspan Should Help Make It Easy.

The result of the opening games, yesterday, in the Central Jersey baseball league—Plainfield's victory and Somerville's defeat—will stir the patriotic blood of every resident of this city. The game at the Oval will be the most interesting ever played, and it is apparent in spite of the course of events that Westfield has a very strong team. Elizabeth's victory over what is supposed to be the equal of Plainfield's team, proves that there are four stout elms in the race, and shows that the team which wins the pennant must be unexcelled in any respect and lacking in no particular.

Plainfield so far has every reason to believe that she has such a team. But it must be kept so for the sake of the honor and glory of our proud little city. Shall defendfasted Elizabeth, vainglorious Somerville or the windy township of Westfield, flaunt the flag of the championship at the end of the season in your faces? Perish the thought, or perish you before you're so disgraced.

There is no doubt it will come high for the Crescent League to keep up such a win as one we do. One half the games are necessarily played away from home, for which the Plainfield managers receive not a cent of revenue yet for which they are under full expense. The expenses, enterprising and patriotic citizens of Elizabeth, Somerville and Westfield support their teams by individual subscription—not large ones, by numerous. There are surely just as philanthropic people in this city! Let's hear from them!

SARCASTIC SHOT FROM THE CYCLISTS.

If the Bell-Ringing Ordinance Be Passed, 'Twill Soon Be Necessary to Add Jail and Insane Asylum, and Graduated Cash-Line.

The following naustik and commonsense petition is being largely signed by local wheelmen, and will be presented with its list of signatures to the common council next meeting night:

To the Honorable the Common Council of the City of Plainfield.

GENTLEMEN:—The undersigned, who flatter themselves they may be truthfully styled, "respectable citizens", respectfully, but earnestly, petition your honorable body to defeat the present form of the proposed ordinance requiring the use of bicycles and other noiseless carriages.

We confess that the carrying of a lantern at night, and of a bell when they are ridden, is necessary, may be considered proper regulations, yet in our humble opinion, to require every man, woman and child who bestrides a wheel to ring a bell wherever he, she or it approaches certain arbitrary and unstable distance, of a pedestrian or conveyance, under the penalty of a fine, would be an extreme which our respected city court sheets out to those unfortunates who come before him, is the most severe, "every time" penalty we have delegated to produce bedlam in our streets and bring our venerated city government into disrepute.

If such an ordinance is to be enforced it will be necessary to locate a bell-ringing station in the basement of the court room, while a city insane asylum will be a great desideratum. If it is not to be enforced then it had much better not be passed.

Trusting that your honorable body will realize the justice of our plea, and either remove the bell-ringing feature or, failing in that, will at least order the marking of the city sidewalks plainly marked with a scale of feet and inches, so that bicycle riders may be accurately measure with the eye the proximities of their approaches to pedestrians and conveyances, that they are about to cross the "dead line", we remain, Your most humble servants,

AN ARTISTIC SKETCH.

A Hitherto Unpublished Story by Walter Whitman.

He Called It "The Last of the Sacred Army," and He Named It Well—The Noble Warriors of Our Freedom.

[COPYRIGHT, 1892.]

[This characteristic little sketch, written in 1862, has never been printed in any of Walt Whitman's published works. In these days the poet signed his full first name.]

The last of the warriors of our freedom—let us guard with a holy care. Let the mighty pulse which throbs tonight in a million hearts at the utterance of that nation's names of glory never be languid when their deeds are told or their examples stirred. To him of the calm gray eye, selected by the Leader of the ranks of Heaven as the instrument for a people's redemption; to him, the bright and brave, who fell in the attack at Bred'e; to him, the nimble-footed runner, the true heart at Santa; to the young stranger from the luxuries of his native France, to all who fought in the long, weary fight for disenfranchisement from arbitrary rule—may our star fade and our good angel smile upon us never if all to chamber them in our hearts or forget the method of their deep sacrifice!

For the fame of these is not as the fame of common heroes. The mere gaining of battles, the driving away of an opposing force, wielding the great energies of bodies of military, rising proudly amid the smoke and din of fight and marching the haughty march of a conqueror—all this, spirit stirring as it may be to the world, would fail to command the applause of the just and discriminating. But such is not the base wherein Asian warriors found their title to renown. Our storied names are those of the soldiers of liberty—hardy souls encased in hardly bodies, untainted with the effeminacy of voluptuous cities, patient, enduring much for principle's sake, and wending on through blood, disease, destitution and prospects of gloom to attain the great treasure.

Years have passed, the sword clash and the thundering of the guns have died away, and all personal knowledge of these revels—of the fierce heavitives to hate, and the wounds, and scorns, and curses from the injured, and the waitings from the prisons. Even now in the memory of a few score gray haired men whose number is known after season, made thinner and thinner by death. Happy, too, the time is arriving when war, with all its train of sanguinary horrors, will be a thwarted custom among the nations of the earth. A newer and better philosophy—teaching how evil it is to throw down and slay ranks of fellow men because of the spring mists that rigid ground.

The leper of his race—did he not, looking around in the world, see millions whose swelling hearts are all crushed into the dust, because the iron steps of oppression; did he not behold how kingcraft and priestcraft stalk shrouded over fair portions of the globe and freeze the strain and rivet the yoke; and did he not feel that it were better to live in one flaming atmosphere of carnage than slavishly thus—would offer up nightly prayers that this new philosophy might prevail to the utmost, and the reign of peace never more be disturbed among mankind.

On one of the anniversaries of our national independence I was staying at the house of an old farmer, about a mile from the county village, and one of whose inhabitants were keeping up the spirit of the occasion with great fervor. The old man himself was a true-hearted patriot. Early in the morning my kindness had been broken by the sharp crack of his ancient musket (I looked upon the musket with reverence, for it had seen service in the war), and many hints in honor of the day. I am free to confess my military propensities were far from congenial, and my spirit relative as they might have been considered at such a time) to suppress certain peevish qualms which arose from the lurker of my sweet repose. In the course of the forenoon I attended the services which I observed in the village, and during the usual patriotic address on the usual bunch with the usual worn sentences that had fought in the contest now commemorated, witnessed the evolutions of the uniform company and returned home with the full content appetite for my dinner.

The afternoon was warm and drowsy. I ensconced myself in my easy chair, near the window, feeling to that most blissful state of semi-consciousness which it is now and then, though rarely, given to mortals to enjoy. I was alone, the family of my host having gone on some visit to a neighbor. The bees hummed in the garden and among the flowers that climbed over the window frame. A sleepy influence seemed to imbue everything around. Occasionally a faint sound of some remote firing from the village would float along, or the just perceptible music of the band or the huzzas of the crowd. But these were far from being jars to the quiet spirit I have mentioned.

Insensibly my consciousness became less and less distinct, my head leaned back, my eyes closed and my senses released from their working vigilance, I slept.

How strange a chance is sometimes the outset to a dream! There was the pulpit of the rude church, the scene of the oration, and in it a gentleman with whom I had noticed as the drummer in the band, beating away as if rolling sustained thunder. Then the voice of the speaker of the day pitched coppers with some urchins in the boys, and the grave personage who had opened the services with prayer was half stripped and running a foot-race with a jockey-looker. The places and the persons familiar to my morning excursion about the country were mingled with all in, but in situations all fantastic and out of the way.

After awhile what I behold began to reduce itself to more method. With the singular characteristic of dreams I knew—although not by what process—that years elapsed from the then time, and I was among a new generation. Beings by me never seen before, and some with shriveled forms, being an odd resemblance to some whom I had known in the bloom of manhood, met my eyes.

Methought I stood in a splendid city. It seemed a gala day, and the gayest people were swiftly wending along the streets and walks, as if to behold some great spectacle or triumphal entry.

"Whither do the people go?" said I, to a stranger who passed me, hurrying on with the rest.

"Know you not," answered he, "that the Last of the Sacred Army may be seen today?"

And he hastened forward, apparently fearful lest he might be late.

Among the throng I noticed many women, some of them with infants in their arms. Then there were boys, beautiful forms, walking erect with a more intense desire even than the men to behold. And so I went on for some distance, coming toward the place where I stood, a troop of young females in the costume of Diana, bearing baskets of fresh flowers. The street pelted and pushed so violently that the purity of their garments was sullied, and some of the flowers fell to the ground. Those who received the wreath, being delighted her bosom were trampled into the ground.

"Oh, heathen men!" cried the child, and she began to weep.

"Do not grieve, gentle one," said I, as the weeping child.

"And you," turning to the others, "blame them not, for they know not the Noble Warriors of Our Freedom."

Brilliant Gems.

It is my lot to teach literature in a girls' college, writes a Topeka Commercial correspondent. We were studying Gray's Elegy, and had lingered long over the line

Some village Hampden, that with dauntless breast.

The little tyrant of his fields withstood.

Some mute inglorious Milton here may rest.

Some village Cromwell guiltless of his country's blood.

"What is the meaning of the second line?" asked.

No response.

"The little tyrant of his fields," added, wheedlingly; but the girls only nibbled their pencils and sat in thought.

At last one of them, a bland, brainless, amiable beauty, lifted her big eyes, drew a sigh and quavered, tenderly: "The potato bug?"

A War-Time Disease.

An old restaurant bill, printed in Richmond in January, 1864, gives the following war-time prices in confederate money: Soup, $1.50; chicken, $5.50; corned beef hash, $3; ham and eggs, $4; one oyster, $2; coffee, $2; bread and butter, $1.50; a bottle of champagne, $50; a drink of poor whisky, $3; a bottle of ale, $15, and a cigar, $2.

FIELDING AS A WITNESS.

Cross-Examined to His Great Loss and Detriment.

He Learns That It Is Better to Be a Dive-Keeper Than a Witness Against Him—A Lighter of Tar Refuses for a Liar.

[COPYRIGHT, 1892.]

Previous to the time when I witnessed the unfortunate affair in Swagley's saloon I had never been found guilty of any criminal act. Indeed, I had never been arrested. My reputation would hardly have been better; it was only a short head behind my character. But now all this is changed. I have been dragged into court and convicted of knowing something derogatory to an eminent gentleman. I have been cross-examined by one of our most notorious criminal lawyers, and the good name which I held so dear has been lost in the shuffle. He has left me a reputation which would not have been jack high among the forty thieves.

Let me explain the circumstances. The neighborhood in which I reside had been eminently respectable, even before before the prosecutor could interpose.

"Will you swear that one of your relatives was not hanged?" persisted Mr. Mucker.

"Certainly."

"Fielding, how many relations have you in both branches of your family?"

"Heaven knows," said I, "several thousands, I suppose."

"Are you personally acquainted with all of them?"

"Certainly not."

"Will you name all your first and second cousins, and tell me what each one died of?"

"I can't; it's preposterous."

"Then, do you swear that one of them was not hanged, as the records show."

But here the prosecutor who had been objecting till his tongue was fairly crumpled with wariness, succeeded in making himself heard, and the judge ruled out all these questions. But I could see the jurors eyeing me with morbid curiosity as a cousin whose dirt cousin had been hanged.

If, however, I confined himself to remote accusations such as this, I would have acted little; but he attacked me on every side. He pried into everything of which he himself had been guilty; and after thus exhausting all the possibilities of degradation he sat down, and I opened.

Mr. Slyme made the closing argument, and I must in justice say that which had been ruled out as if they had been unassailably proven against me. He urged me not to regard the word of a perjured, rum-soaked wretch like me, against that of a gentleman like himself. But to regard the testimony which he advised that it, they disagreed. Since then I have felt that the finger of scorn pointed at me wherever I go. I have received letters from various old friends, some of them naturally taken under the delusion that I had been tried, and so congratulate me on the verdict; others have sneeringly hinted me that intimate association with a man like Swagley might have been expected to lead to the depth to which they regret to learn that I have fallen.

THE ARMIES OF EUROPE.

Ready to Participate in the Unavoidable Conflict.

Conference Which Do Not Heed Occurrences—Speech of the Pope—Views of Count Moltke—Strength and Work Points of the Various Armies.

[Special Letter.]

Every once in a while, when reviews of the great European powers meet for the purpose of holding a conference, immediately after there is a rush of alarming reports are sent out that the peace of Europe is done more insured for an indefinite period. Few people, however, believe these statements, but as they are usually followed by increased activity in military affairs, it is more thoughtful are inclined to think there now historic conference between the crowned heads hardly ever result in a satisfactory settlement of the subjects under discussion.

That a European war of unprecedented magnitude cannot be averted for any length of time is admitted by all observers. Germany, which has done more than any other nation to preserve the peace, is on the verge of a social upheaval that can be avoided only by a war with a foreign power. Discontent has permeated every stratum of German society. Even the old conservatives refuse to support some of the extravagant measures advocated by the ministry. The socialists are growing in strength. The ultramontane faction has been alienated by the government's persecution of the anti-Semitic fad. The states of southern Germany, notably Bavaria, are jealous of Prussia's ascendancy, and war with the Prussian people would distract public attention from home affairs and strengthen the position of the constitutional party.

Austria-Hungary, Germany's close ally, is likewise distressed by internal dissensions. The dual empire is composed of nine distinct nationalities, speaking nine languages and fifteen or more dialects. Each one of the principalities demands legislative concessions which the government will have to grant in case it cannot direct popular interest to other channels. The polyglot army of the empire is better adapted at present than it has been for years. The officers and soldiers are ready to fight and the diplomats have for a long time had a covetous eye on some of the Balkan states.

Italy, as everybody knows, is on the verge of bankruptcy. In case of war its people would refuse to furnish the money to complete its armament and put the army on a fighting basis. The Italian alliance, moreover, has thousands of antagonistic in Humbert's kingdom, and unless something is very soon done in wider European displays, Italy may be compelled to sever its connection with the Dreibund.

Russia has for a long time been anxious to fight, but she is not yet in condition. Her open battalions are not armed with the latest fire-arms and her treasury is comparatively empty. A recent Russian writer said: "She lacks the nervus rerum." It is true, Russia can place in the field more soldiers than any other two countries of Europe, but unless they are equipped with modern rifles and amply supplied with food they cannot be maintained as attack from the well-fed, excellently-equipped and perfectly-disciplined soldiers of Germany.

France, which would be Russia's ally in the event of a general call to arms, is handicapped in the same manner that Russia is. The anarchistic element, which itself secluded for a time, has of late developed a strength to make trouble. A foreign war is not popular with the revolutionists, who preach the universal brotherhood of man for no other purpose than to be able to rob their fellow-citizens under the name of "the commune." Much of the Russophobia now prevailing in France is of an artificial nature. The two countries have nothing in common, except a mutual distrust of Germany, which in the French republic amounts to absolute hatred.

England occupies her usual position in the theory. She is committed neither to the triple alliance nor the Russian-French combination. Her interests, however, are on the side of the Dreibund, for should Russia once secure a foothold at Constantinople the czar's troops would be in a commanding position to threaten the integrity of Great Britain's Eastern empire. France is extremely jealous of English ascendancy in the world, and would gladly welcome an opportunity to rid Alexandria and Cairo of the queen's red coats. Under the circumstances England will hardly be able to maintain neutrality in case of a general conflict.

At the present time the strength of the various great armies of Europe is divided as follows:

Countries.	Soldiers in Army.	Reserves.	Guards and Militia.	Total.
Germany	1,500,000	1,500,000	1,000,000	4,000,000
France	1,500,000	1,000,000	1,000,000	3,500,000
Russia	1,000,000	1,000,000	1,000,000	3,000,000
Austria-Hungary	800,000	800,000	800,000	2,400,000
Italy	600,000	600,000	600,000	1,800,000

The total strength of the combined German forces on peace footing is 518,409, or about 20,000 less than that of France. In case of a protracted war both countries would unquestionably call out the reserves, which would give Germany a preponderance of 1,000,000 in numbers. It is questionable, however, whether the French army would in such a case be more effective than the Teutonic antagonists. Many of the great leaders of the Franco-Prussian war are dead, in the army, and in this branch of the service the republic is far behind the empire. The cavalry of France is also inferior to that of Germany. The former are excellent sentinels, while the French have never developed a good mounted arm. Their mounted regiments are, however, well drilled, and in case of battle would prove effective on the flanks of the wings of both countries are in excellent condition and armed with the latest improved rifles and guns, and are well supplied with ammunition. A struggle between these two gigantic bodies of men would be the most terrible that has ever been recorded in history. It would be the forty-centennial campaigns of 1870-71; but as both will have allies in the field, the struggle would be on a scale to dwarf into insignificance even the operations of the Napoleonic wars.

Russia, often termed the colossus of Europe, maintains constantly an army of 900,000 men. In times of war this force would be increased to nearly 3,000,000. The Russians are excellent fighters. They have always shown a disposition to obey orders implicitly and throw themselves into the jaws of death at the word of command. They are, however, too ignorant to exhibit individual courage or powers of assault. Once in disorder, they have hitherto proved themselves incapable of rallying to beat an orderly retreat. Usually they vanquish their enemy by superior force and by bold attack. The most skilled branch of the czar's military legions are the Cossacks, semi-civilized horsemen who live and feed in the steppes district of the empire. They number 3,100 officers and 44,920 men.

The other armies here enumerated, all, with the exception of Russia, are armed with magazine guns. France and Germany, as already stated, use the smokeless powder, which, according to high military authorities, promises to revolutionize warfare. Germany has recently introduced war balloons which can be directed even against a high wind, and France has made experiments with aerial vessels which can be sailed anywhere and from which charges of dynamite can be dropped on the opposing forces. That the coming war will be the most terrible the world has ever seen cannot be doubted when the strength of the contending forces is taken into consideration.

Difficult Task.

Many idioms of the English language possess a striking and picturesque significance, which from long and constant use is often lost sight of. Occasionally, however, the association brings it out with clearness and force. Two women were discussing a young man of their acquaintance when the latter had been a distinguished member of the bar, and a useful member of society.

"If you go," said one, "I think George is very bright and capable. I am confident he will succeed."

"Yes," replied the other, "he is undoubtedly a worthy young man, but I don't think he has head enough to fill his father's shoes."

Watchmaking Wisdom.

When Charles the Fifth, emperor of Germany, abdicated his throne and became a monk, he amused himself with the mechanical arts, and became an expert watchmaker. He also endeavored to taught him a few truths which he never had learned during his kingship. One day he exclaimed, in amazement: "What an egregious fool I have been to have squandered so long so much blood and treasure to make a kingdom and to make all men think alike, when, with all my attempts, I cannot make a few watches keep time together!"—Harper's Young People.

Very Curious.

"I was born at two in the morning," is how a story goes.

"Why, how can that be?" says little six-year-old Willie. "Every body is sleeping at that time."—Judge.

A Great Boy.

"I wonder how much candy you can get for two cents," mused Tommy.

"I know," said Bob, in a triumphant voice: "two cents' worth."—Harper's Young People.

Still Undecided.

"What are you reading, Marian?" asked matrons of a little girl who sat with her head bent down over a heavy volume of large type.

"The Wide, Wide World, mamma."

"Gracious, child!" interrupted a big sister, "you can't understand more than half of that book."

Marian looked at the speaker with dignity. "I read it for the half I do understand!" she said.—Harper's Young People.

THE WOMAN OF FASHION.

Some Handsome Ten Gowns Which She Will Don Before Long.

Due to Chronicle Louis Velvetteen And Another Novelty—Sleeves—Hats That Are Made Nowadays—The Next Colors.

[COPYRIGHT, 1892.]

I have just returned from one of the pleasantest calls I ever made in all my life; I have been paying my respects to a lady that has a most enviable figure—that of commanding and being obeyed, of suggesting and being realized to carry out her suggestions, of changing her mind and being allowed to do so at her own free will—in short, to be a maker of modes. And for the reason I enjoyed it so much was that she was perfectly charming to-day, and she had a particularly large number of beautiful things to show me.

Among them were ten gowns, and some indescribable finishing touches to a ten gown that was wonderfully and beautifully made, and what it is making that most ideal material for a tea gown, the new Louis velveteen, and its folds hung straight in rich simplicity. The color was a dull chocolate, rather light, and against it the pure white of the lace was charming, so generously used in the composition of the gown showed to good effect. The full front was made of India muslin, and it was so full that it admitted of being drawn to the back in a pretty sash effect. This front was cut rather low, and a great medici collar rolled far out, even to the big shoulder puffs, which were of velveteen. From under the puffs fell the prettiest, lightest, cobweb sleeves you could imagine. Of course they were of India muslin, and were caught up on top so as to reveal a good part of the arm. These fell down very long, and at the bottom were drawn together like a cornucopia. Some very delicate gold passementerie separated the puff from the sleeve, and a wide passementerie edge fell over each shoulder. The train was very imposing. The gown was lined with silk of the same pale chocolate color, shot with rose.

It was so magnificent that it sort of subdued me, and I was quite relieved as I glanced around to catch sight of something very light and dainty; now a bit like the other, although it was in a fine gown also. This was made of a fine brocade of a very pale green shade, a fresh green, just the color one thinks of a serious send. The gown fell from each shoulder in a wide box plait edged with a frost of thin silk of a still paler tint. This frost was very elaborate. It was plaited at the top, and was full and long, and the plaits were banded at the waist by a white embroidered belt. Then the frost hung down in full folds to the feet, caught up diagonally half-way down by another strap of embroidery. A double cape of fine lace fell over the shoulders and back. The sleeves were tight-fitting, with a full cuff-effect at the top, and were cut far open at the cuff, filled in with lace that would almost cover the hands. This train was long, if anything, than the other.

Then the dressmaker sat down and talked: "Yes, I seem to be making a great many tea gowns, although those two are the most artistic. I have one now under way that is not nearly so elaborate but that is going to be awfully pretty. It is made of white cashmere, and is tight-fitting both back and front. Over this is going to fall, both back and front, long wool folds of white muslin, plaited to about six inches wide. Around the neck I am going to have a big gathered turn-down collar of the white silk also. The sleeves are cashmere, full, cut with but one seam, and gathered tight at the wrist, where there falls a deep lace ruffle. Fine embroidered bands form a yoke and define the line of the waist.

"Silk fronts, however, are not so popular as they have been. I've made a number of tea gowns lately without them. The full Grecian drapery across the front is very pretty indeed; it is generally caught with a Grecian pin. Then on the other side we put a plain rever.

"One that I made of striped silk looked very well with the stripes brought down in front to form a V at the waist. From under the V the silk came down in full folds, with the stripes running up and down. At the sides of the pointed yoke, lace was gathered in, and was brought up over the shoulders in a bertha. The back was a pattern, which is the favorite now for tea gowns."

I thanked the dressmaker and departed. And as I turned to go down the steps, I stopped short to gaze on a very pretty girl with a very pretty dress coming down the street. It was of a peculiar shade of green, just about the shade of mildew. She had a clear light pink in her cheeks, and could wear the shade without the slightest inconvenience. The dress was made very simply. Above the edge of the plain bell skirt there was a little bolero jacket of the same colored cloth, and a similar binding on the cuff of each sleeve. The rest of the waist-and-bodice was made of this bright tan color. She wore ties of the same shade, and tan colored silk stockings, which I could see as she stepped forward, were of the shade of her dress. It was a most effective combination, and the girl knew she looked well, too. If she hadn't known it when she passed me, the admiring glance of even the woman that passed her would have informed her.

Green has surely reigned supreme for a long time. Even fawn bowed low before it the past season. No particular shade is the fad of the hour, but all the beautiful new shades of light and dark, dull and brilliant, soft and harsh. But save with a fine guipure lace collar quite deep. Her hat was of blue straw, just the same shade, and was trimmed with big loops of blue moire ribbon, from out of which grew three tall American beauties. One lay across the front brim also, and their deep pink hearts looked deeper and pinker next to the blue.

War Balloons.

Have the Germans solved the problem of aerial navigation, and are they keeping the secret for war purposes? This is the startling question other nations may well ask. Certain it is that German balloons have been able to travel high in the air over the Russian frontier in Poland, take observations of the fortifications of Warsaw and other places, pour an intense electric light upon whatever spot seemed dark, examine it intensely and then steer once again toward home, or in any direction desired, the balloon being under perfect control. It is said that storage batteries are necessarily very heavy. If the Germans have the secret of utilizing them in an airship and steering in any direction then there is nothing that can prevent Germany from conquering any nation in Europe. A shell or two dropped from a balloon would destroy a whole city, and it would be helpless. There is no runaway science at present known that can train a cannon to fire straight up in the air.

In it sounds soft and simple would predominate and gestures would formabout of the conversation. Have you ever studied the faces of those little sprites and seen their big, bright eyes twinkle and their chubby little fingers and dimpled hands restlessly move without ceasing, day in and day out? Their language would be cute enough and all monosyllables. Without much talk they manage to communicate with each other so as to be understood, and curious little sounds will express their pleasure, disgust, contempt, love or hate. Of course we call it 'baby talk' or 'infants' prattle,' but if they were to work out their own way of communication it would be a regularly built language, and a concise one, too."

A MOVING-DAY STORY.

The New Baby Made Lots of Work for Mother and Maggie.

It was moving day in the playroom. All the dolls, as well as the doll-house and the six kitchens and dining rooms, aria and little trunks, bureaus, chairs and playthings, were to be moved from the big back room where they had always been comfortably situated, into a little back hall room, which, though smaller, should be entirely devoted to them.

A new baby had been added to the family, and the baby and baby's nurse required so much extra space that it became necessary to give them the large room. And so the doll and the doll's colony had to be moved.

Winifred and Mabel Hasting, who were the little owners of the playroom and its contents, were up bright and early on moving day, and right after breakfast set about their task of moving the things into the little hall room. It had all been nicely planned, and upon the door there was a bright new painting, while the walls were nicely hung with bright pictures cut from old newspapers and magazines. Thus Winifred and Mabel had none of the horrors of housecleaning to go through and had merely the task of moving.

After a consultation as to which should be moved first the little chairs, it was best to carry Sister Rose Gertrude and her colony of sick dolls and to dispose of them safely in the room, so that none of the invalids should be disturbed by the moving up of the other things in the old playroom.

Accordingly Winifred carefully carried Sister Rose Gertrude, who was in tall cloth doll, with a china head and in a long gray dress, with a big white apron and cap, and placed her in one corner.

Mabel followed with an armful of sick dolls. Among the number was Miss Malaprop, who had lost one arm, and who was beyond cure because she was a jointed doll and the arm was broken squarely off at the shoulder joint. There was also Mrs. Kendal, who had been scalped one day by some terrible boys who had broken into the playroom with Brother Frank and who had taken this awful revenge because

The division of entomology under Prof. Riley is doing a great economic work for agriculture. It is also carrying on a large scientific work. Some years ago Prof. Riley presented the national museum with his private collection of 115,000 pinned specimens—the labor of twenty-five years—and he has since built up around that nucleus a collection that is unsurpassed in America.

Prof. Riley is not only a specialist, but also a man of wide general culture and interests. He is a member and an officer in many scientific societies here and abroad. He has held lectureships in several of our leading colleges. His published writings fill more than 1,500 titles. His inventions and practical applications of scientific knowledge for checking the ravages of injurious insects have in several instances been of incalculable value to the world at large.

Chicago. Here his attention was directed to the injuries to crops by insects, and he soon became a leader in the study of practical entomology.

At twenty-one he joined the staff of the Prairie Farmer, writing on the subject on injurious insects led to his appointment in 1868 as state entomologist of Missouri, a position he held for six years, then in its infancy, and from that day to this Prof. Riley has been a pioneer and a leader in his field.

His nine annual reports while state entomologist of Missouri have become standard authorities, and are being reissued in this month. These reports attracted the attention of Secretary Rusk, and led to the investigation of the peach fruit-borer, which the latter reported on. Prof. Riley's fame spread rapidly, and in 1877 was appointed chief of the United States entomological commission, which made investigation of the peach fruit-borer, the Rocky Mountain locust, the cotton worm, the Hessian fly and other insects injurious to agriculture. Prof. Riley's connection with the commission ceased in 1879, when he resigned his position to hold exclusive control of the department of entomology, which position he has held ever since, except for two years, when he was abroad on official investigations of the cotton worm in the south.

The division of entomology under Prof. Riley is doing a great economic work for agriculture. It is also carrying on a large scientific work. THE NATIONAL DEMOCRATIC CONVENTION.

The National Democratic Committee, at a meeting held in the city of Washington, D. Each State is entitled to a representation therein equal to the number of the representation to which it is entitled in the next electoral college, and each territory and the District of Columbia shall have two delegates. All Democratic conservative citizens of the United States, irrespective of past political associations and differences, who can unite with us in the effort for pure, economical and constitutional government, are cordially invited to join us in sending delegates to the convention.

BUCKLE ON THE ARMOR.

The present month will witness the Presidential nominations of both the Democratic and Republican parties, and then will commence the work of political activity.

It becomes all Democrats, with zealous unity, to buckle on their armor and prepare for the contest, which, doubtless, will be warmly raged.

They will be for side the principles of right, of justice, personal liberty, and the general public welfare.

Against them has been and will be arrayed unscrupulous elements seeking hierdiction and power at the expense of the producing classes, selfish combinations that are yearly growing more arrogant.

Partisan cunning may endeavor to obscure the real by introducing sham issues. The lines of difference are, however, too distinctly drawn to permit deception.

The actual issue before the people cannot be side-tracked. It is freedom versus monopoly, the just privileges of the many against the sordid designs of the few.

That is the vital issue.

The attitude of the Democratic party is plain and positive. It contends for the equal and prospering right of each and every citizen, and would deny the regard of personal skill, labor, industry and business enterprise, unburdened by needless taxation and unobstructed by mercenary extortioners of any name or kind.

To impose by countenance unjust taxation, whether levied directly on the people, or indirectly filched from their pockets by hidden methods, for the benefit of artfully devised schemes, bears no warrant from honest government and has no affinity with the party of Democracy, which, to quote the language of Andrew Jackson, "stands upon the foundation of equal and exact justice and no human power can drive it from that position."

Democrats! Your cause is just and true! Buckle on your armor!

THEY RETIRE WITH HONOR.

The Cleveland Democratic Association of New Jersey, having accomplished the object for which it was organized, the sending of a delegation instructed for Grover Cleveland to the Chicago Convention, has decided to discontinue its organization. In doing so it has issued an address to the Democrats of the State in which it congratulates them upon the deliberations and outcome of the State Convention of May 25, and has confidence that the Chicago National Convention will select the most suitable candidate. They pledge their support to this nominee, and close as follows: "Let all petty social and local issues be buried; let all factious contests be stilled, that the policy of Tariff Reform, the paramount issue in the coming struggle, may, by united efforts, be formulated and expressed in the statutory law of the United States."

FRIGHTFUL DISASTER.

The oil regions of Pennsylvania were visited on Sunday by a terrible disaster of fire and water that is only eclipsed in the history of the country by the memorable flood at Johnstown just three years ago. It is impossible yet to give anything like an accurate idea of the loss of life and property, as chaos reigns throughout the devastated region. It is safe to say that not less than 150 lives have been lost. Nearly 100 bodies have already been recovered and many people are still missing. The number may far exceed 150, but this is regarded as a conservative estimate. The property loss will reach far into the millions.

The flood came so quickly that the people had no time to reach a place of safety. Oil Creek and Cherry Run swept a number of oil tanks down the stream, and in some way not known they were ignited. In less time than it takes to tell the story the flames spread to the surrounding buildings, and before they could be subdued five blocks had been burned.

The oil from the scores of broken tanks ran into the creek and was ignited by floating debris. In a few minutes the creek was ablaze from shore to shore, and as it was carried down the stream death and destruction followed in its wake. Everything in flammable took fire, and by the time it reached Oil City all the bridges between the two points were consumed.

The Republican National Convention is still in session at Minneapolis as we go to press, with no ballot yet taken for a choice. The gathering is not a harmonious one, and at this writing it is hard to tell who will be the standard bearer of the G. O. P.

James G. Blaine, Secretary of State, on Saturday last sent to President Harrison his formal resignation as Secretary, which was quickly accepted in a short and curt note to Mr. Blaine. There is bad blood now between these two statesmen.

This issue of THE CONSTITUTIONALIST is accompanied by all the laws passed by the last State Legislature. They are issued in such a supplement form as to be of benefit to all who desire to preserve them for future reference.

Senator Thomas S. B. Brown, of Monmouth, died suddenly at his home in Keyport on Saturday. Senator Brown was an old reporter once and highly respected in the community wherein he resided.

HOLY CROSS CHOIR ENTERTAIN.

An Attractive Programme at the Parish Building Last Evening—The Fine Chorus Work Their Greatest Success.

The third of Holy Cross choir's entertainments in aid of their organ fund took place in the parish building Tuesday evening before a large and delighted audience. The programme, a happy combination of melody and mirth, was most enjoyable from start to finish, and while the choir took good care of the musical part, the kickers were not forgotten. The first part of that good-natured quartette, the Four Leaf Clover, who as usual had a first mortgage on all the laughter in the neighborhood.

The musical numbers comprised several well executed choruses; a quartette, Messrs. Bond, W. Tallamy, B. Tallamy and Cutter, who sang sweetly and showed nice training; a pretty baritone solo by William Holohan with accompaniment of male voices; a violin solo by Edward Werbe and Will Tallamy, and a charming piano solo by Miss Helen A. Hasbrouck. There were also vocal solos by Messrs. Cutter, Bond and Fred. Tallamy—both sweet singers—and a boys' chorus of nursery jingles which was very taking. Choirmaster Miner conducted the music and Miss Jessie Utter was accompanist.

Major William L. Saunders of the borough, whose powers as a reader are well known, started the ball rolling with "The Jackdaw of Rheims" and was warmly applauded. His reading was accompanied by interpolations views furnished by Mr. Taft.

The feature of the evening, however, which met with the heartiest reception, was the new and uproariously original—farce by George Taggart entitled "Table d'Hote," which the Four Leaf Clover played for the first time in public. The farce was the work of Mr. Q. Cumber'Squash of Dog Corners,

Roward Spencer
Mr. Quicklunch Drake of the Knickerbocker Will Spencer
Mr. Lemon Yorkens Brockering, "Yellow" correspondent Tiffany Spencer
Mr. Mackintosh Mudd, the star boarder, George Taggart

The scene was the dining-room of a fashionable boarding house at dinner time, and the delay of the stage was perfectly in accord of comment. The tables were spread with the lux uries of the season, the guests were characteristic, exaggerated just enough to be natural, and the cook could almost imagine, when the curtains parted, that the typical boarding-house smell swept out over the audience as the odor of Bourbon flowers does in "Alabama". There was no particular plot to the piece—indeed one of the players said afterwards that a plot would have been in his way—but the fun was fast and went with a rush. The "help" in the boarding-house kitchen were heard singing and quarreling, and when they sang they sang remarkably well, whoever they were. Tiffany Spencer in black face—his best hold, they say—was in at the start, thanking the waiting for the cabman, Will Spencer, as a rural gentleman just arrived from Dog Corners, seated himself at dinner and was soon initiated in the ruling young Wall street broker (Will Spencer) and Mr. Mackintosh Mudd (George Taggart), star boarder and chronic inquirer. The dialogue between these four kept the audience in an uproar. The farce is full of bright sayings and contains a wealth of new slang which will doubtless soon be very popular. Tiffany Spencer's recitation of the bill of fare, and his fight in the background with an imaginary fly, were excellent. Howard Spencer's acting was very good, and his make-up will worthy of mention. The imitation of a sky-rocket by Will Spencer brought down the house. But the hit of the evening was made by George Taggart. His acting showed careful study, his make-up was extremely grotesque, and his lines were all squeezed out of the "surprise pudding" being excellently delivered. The play gave evidence of having been well rehearsed and everything went smoothly, and the curtain fell amid a storm of applause.

WESTFIELD STILL BOOMING.

Upwards of $50,000 Worth of Real Estate Sold by One Citizen in 90 Days.

Dr. Ripley has sold within the last three months, over $25,000 worth of real estate in Westfield, all to be immediately improved. It is all on a line with and 3pc of the Central railroad, being on Cumberland street, South avenue, Park avenue and the Boulevard.

John Ulrich, who has recently canvassed the State of New Jersey in an official capacity, says: "There is not in the entire State of New Jersey anything to surpass Ripley Hill as a place of residence."

John Cogar and C. A. Smith are about to build on the Boulevard a pair of elegant residences. Welch Bros., J. W. Cox, Mr. Russell, of the Mail and Express, are just completing residences on Park street, and H. M. Russell and others are about to build on Cumberland street.

In answer to the question, "How is real estate in Westfield?" we are safe in saying fifty houses will be built on the property recently sold by Dr. Ripley, in less than one year. Some of them will cost over five or six thousand dollars apiece. If on an average they cost half that, the improvements will amount to $275,000.—Westfield Leader.

His Personal Experience.

Hon. James W. Husted, while serving his fifth term as Speaker of the Assembly of the State of New York was

STATE OF NEW YORK, ASSEMBLY CHAMBER,
ALBANY, Jan. 16, 1890.

I desire once more to bear my testimony to the value of ALLCOCK'S POROUS PLASTER. I have used them for twenty-five years past, and can unconditionally commend them as the best remedy for pain that I have known. Years ago, when suffering from a carriage accident, I was injured, I gave them a thorough trial. In less than one week I was free from pain, feeling disappeared, and within a week I was entirely relieved. On another occasion, when I had overtaxed my strength, which I was recommended to go to Florida to relieve, I determined to test the plasters again. I applied them to my chest and between my shoulders, and in less than a fortnight was entirely cured. On still another occasion, when I was suffering from a severe cold settled in the shoulder to such an extent that I could scarcely move my arm, I applied the plasters, and within a very few days the pain disappeared, and I was entirely well. My wife has used them constantly by me, whether at home or abroad. My family as well as myself have found them to be a sovereign remedy, both for internal and external troubles. I have also used them for kidney difficulty in my life, and the application of the plasters cured me in a week. I deem it my duty, as I said before, to bear my testimony in a public way to their efficacy, and I have no doubt I shall do more good than by giving you my personal experience.

Is the Water Company "Working" the City With an Inferior Hydrant?

Representative Stones of the Ludlow Hydrant company, was in Plainfield Wednesday, inquiring as to what the "trick" was that he heard of in other places as coming from this city regarding the hydrants that are being put in to fill the Water Supply company's contract with the council.

He soon found out that the trouble was that the four-way hydrants in this company are putting in are not the automatic cut-off that is in the hydrants set up some time ago by the Water company as a sample of what was to follow. These now being put in are very inconvenient besides liable to permit serious damage upon the occasion of a fire. Any stream already playing on a fire and hard to be shut off however it was necessary to make the connection of another line of hose. But if such hydrants are put in as the Water company has understood to have promised, connections may be made at all times without an effect on streams already working.

There are 108 hydrants in all that the city has contracted for—21 four-way and 90 two-way. Every one that is not as promised, should be thrown out.

A Board Fence Somerset Shattered.

While grading High street in Bound Brook, last week, and when opposite the residence of Dick Brokaw, cashier of Bound Brook's only bank, the workmen excavated nearly two wagon loads of bones. He hopitatity slaves, and everyone supposed that they were buried there. Upon examination it was found that the bones were all legs, and inquiry developed the fact that it was the site of an old slaughter house. Thus is another romance exploded.

Want a Half-Holiday.

The employes of the various lumber yards in this city are trying to secure a universal Saturday half-holiday movement this trade. The movement was inaugurated last Saturday by a few of the yards, but there were several who did not close at all. The men are desirous to have it generally observed, but they claim that two or three of the bosses are holding back in the matter. It seems to be a fact that all should be willing to close their yards for a half-day on Saturdays during the summer.

Somebody's Neglecting the People's Welfare.

It is understood by THE PRESS that all that is necessary to bring about the removal of the unsightly freight house, and the tracks in Monroe street, south of the track of that great nuisance, is some joint action between the common council of the citizens and the railroad authorities.

It is beyond doubt that the latter have made some proposition of the sort already. But somebody has failed to fix it. Bring it to light and hear what the people say of it! Was it in the hands of any of the committees of the past intrusted with the matter but who fell asleep by the wayside and dropped the in-strate of the community in the ditch?

Dropped in Dickerson.

Job Coddington has been dropped from the roll of borough marshals by unanimous vote of the council. The reason assigned is that he has resigned the office at the legal stipulated pay of 25 cents an hour while on duty, but when asked for for duty refused to serve for less than 50 cents an hour. The council concluded that it did n't want an officer who stricted the call of duty in time of need.

THE BROOKSIDE SANATORIUM.

A WORTHY INSTITUTION WHICH PRIVATE ENTERPRISE HAS ERECTED.

Now Patients Will Be Cared for in the Model South Plainfield Asylum—Description of the Buildings, with Details of the Physicians' Equipment—Delightful Retreat and Cure for Those Suffering from Mind-Diseases.

In the out accompanying this article is an excellent perspective of the Brookside Sanatorium, which has been completed on the fine old grounds of the Wadley estate, on Somerset street, opposite the entrance to the Johnston drive and the mansion. The old Wadley property was for years one of the most beautiful homesteads in this vicinity, and in still one of the most picturesque spots on the local landscape. The cool, sparkling waters of Stony brook flow musically through the grounds, at the foot of the hill, just below the building pictured above. All about are pleasant fields, and groves of shade trees whose foliage is kept fresh and verdant by cool mountain breezes, and in whose branches sing birds fit shout, singing sweet melodies.

Within this Nature's paradise the property owners on Hillside avenue objected. The building is built in the true Italian style, of brick, which is stuccoed on the outside with a very rough light colored material, with the red roof and brick arches and courses, give a very pleasing color effect. The architecture will be something entirely different from that of any other building in this vicinity. The interior throughout is finished in selected Georgia pine, and the most modern sanitary plumbing fixtures and conveniences for health and comfort has been considered a first essential. The house will be heated with hot water, and lighted by electric light, making it one of the most complete buildings ever erected for the purpose. The building is 59 feet wide and 73 long, and has accommodations for about 30 patients, with the full corps of nurses, attendants, and other necessary employes. The water-supply is of the purest, sweetest and coolest, being obtained from a bubbling spring in a mountain-spring, which gives a strong pressure all through the pipes in the house. The drainage is perfect.

The establishment of the Sanatorium is a result of the enterprise of Justus H. Cooley, M. D., T. S. Davis, M. D., and T. S. Burr. These three have incorporated themselves into a stock company, and the Sanatorium is the property of that concern. That the enterprise will be a great and growing success is certain, with such careful and faithful physicians at its head, and men of such business energy and sagacity developing it.

Before having a word of work done on the building, Drs. Cooley and Davis visited all the new asylums in the country and carefully examined into the merits of the different buildings and methods of the treatment and cure of the insane, for disorders of the mind are to be the specialty of the new institution.

The method of the Sanatorium in the treatment of the insane will be of the most modern system, entirely new to this section of the country, and which has already had the most satisfactory results in the practice of the physicians at their retreat on Orchard avenue, Watchung. That, by the way, is to be abandoned as soon as the new building is opened, which will be in about three weeks.

The Sanatorium will be nothing less than a quiet, peaceful home for the poor unfortunates whose need is to be ministered to a mind diseased. Chains are long since dead, and avoid having a prisoner report about the place. There will be no padded cells, no strait-jackets, no other ugly appliances to have aroused passions and violent demeanor. Each patient will be carefully watched and attended, and everything done to soothe and divert his mind from the unfortunate channel in which it has turned, and fastened in with what is termed a safety-sheet. This confines his movements without causing discomfort or pain, and such as may appear on many a private residence in the city, and extend only half-way up. The safety is just the same as with a full-sack jacket, but is made of "canton flannel and tenacious steel; and similar improvements have been adopted throughout the institution.

The men and the women will be kept on separate floors All unnecessary restraint will be removed from the patients, and they will enjoy the recreation of billiards, such matters, the grounds for open air, and similar amusements. Everyone in the place will "be most kindly cared for, and unless having loved ones in the institution may be assured that their friends will be most tenderly looked after, and if at all possible a cure effected.

The method of treatment will be the most humane and intelligent known to human enlightenment. The system of medical attendance will be homeopathic, which has been so successfully used by Drs. Cooley and Davis in the past.

The present Sanatorium will not be enlarged. The idea is to develop according to the needs of the future. As soon as the present building is outgrown, a new and entirely separate building will be constructed. No more than twenty-five patients will be permitted in one building. The corporation has abundant land to carry out the project on this idea, for the ground covers 70 acres.

The master-brain responsible for the excellent architecture of the Sanatorium building is that of A. L. C. Marsh, and the contractors employed on the structure were:

Brokaw & Cain, carpenters; W. C. Smith, mason; Wykoff & Gullek, painters; A. M. Griffin, plumbing and heating; A. D. Phillips, electric wiring; W. D. Sharkey, iron work; Cheney & Freyer, iron sash; Arnold & Lock, stained glass.

Marshal Feuchert Gets a "Raise".

The salary of the chief borough marshal of North Plainfield has been increased from $97 50 to $65 a month. There was considerable debate over the matter. The present incumbent, William Feuchert, was highly praised, as an earnest, faithful and efficient officer, by all, but councilman Hageman opposed the increase on the ground of economy. He said the borough funds were too low to warrant increase. Councilmen Hummer and Meacham agreed with him, but the majority of councilmen Hoffman, Neal and Connolly caused a tie, which Mayor Saunders settled by voting in favor of the increase. The marshal gets legal fees besides his salary.

KILLS HERSELF AT LAST.

Bound Boy, Who Once Claimed She Was a Plainfield Firebug, Takes a Double Dose of Poison in a New York Station House.

Emma Day, who formerly lived in this city, died in Bellevue Hospital, New York, at 5 o'clock Tuesday afternoon from the effects of poison taken during the morning. She entered a police station in East Twenty-second street, and after telling them in a short length to cry. Sergeant Carey tried to comfort her and she informed him that she had taken a dose of Paris green. She asked for a glass of water, and while the sergeant was calling an ambulance she swallowed a large quantity of rat poison. She was hurried to the hospital and every effort was made to save her life, but without avail.

Emma Day was born in Paulina, Warren county, and has an aunt and uncle there now. She began a wayward career in this city with her sister several years ago, and first attracted public attention in 1887 by burning fire to some wood sheds almost in front of a room in the post office block. There was a baby sleeping in a cradle in the room, which was one of the apartments occupied by the family against whom Emma Day and her younger sister had a grudge. The fire was discovered and extinguished just in time to save the life of the baby.

The two Day girls were arrested. They were saucy and flippant in the little lockup of Summit and tried to get up another fire there by applying a lighted match to a stick pushed through the coil door. While there they claimed they were responsible for the burning of Plainfield's promising fire. They were removed to the Union county jail, where they spent a short time. The younger sister has been lost to public sight since her release, but has since kept herself before the public at intervals by her wayward behavior and by sensational attempts at suicide.

Their many friends in this city will wish them a happy journey.

The Plainfield Street Railway company Friday night petitioned the borough council to permit it to extend its tracks through Somerset street to Summit avenue, and through such other streets as the council and company should agree on. The matter was referred to the committee on streets.

STRUCK BUT NEVER KNEW IT.

The House of Israel Compton, on Running Avenue, Escaltes a Severe Shock in Last Night's Heavy Storm.

The house of Israel Compton, 163 Manning avenue, North Plainfield, was struck by lightning, Sunday night, and damaged to a considerable extent. The shingles on both sides of the roof were torn off and the concussion seemed to spread the beams apart.

One of the strangest things in regard to the lightning was the course it took. Entering the house at the roof it proceeded down the side, breaking the gutter in pieces. Entering the parlor it made a circle of the room and struck a brass moulding which had been recently put up. It then left the house and followed an iron pipe about twenty feet into the ground making a large hole.

The walls throughout the house are pretty well damaged and left in a poor condition. The family did not feel the shock at all although the force with which the house was struck must have been great. Almost everybody else in the city or borough heard it, but Compton's slept on unconscious. The house is insured and the agent has been promised to repair all damages.

A tree back of the house was stripped of its bark.

Committee English Non-Resident on Points of Law Raised by County Attorney Scribner.

In the case of the Prairie Cattle company against F. X. Schoonmaker of this city, a decision was rendered by Judge Vanderpool Wednesday. The case was tried, by consent of both sides, without a jury, and the argument for and against was entirely upon legal points backed up by cases of the same kind in great favor by opposing counsel. That astute and celebrated counselor James English appeared for the plaintiff and William K. McClure of this city for the defendant. The latter won. Judge Vanderpool has consulted Mr. English after spending some days weighing Mr. McClure's reasoning and studying up the cases cited in great favor by opposing counsel. Taking into consideration the fact that the case was tried entirely upon points of law that Mr. McClure is considered a wide knowledge and long experience, was the opposing lawyer; that Mr. McClure appeared unaided in the defense, and that he won the case on the merits of the law alone, the victory is a marked one for the new Union county attorney.

A Stanley Bicycle Boss Here Going Arranged With Prizes of All Kinds.

There are twenty-five hundred bicycle riders in Plainfield, a thousand of whom think they can ride faster than most of the others. Consequently a handicap race is being arranged open to every rider in the city and borough, and in which an opportunity will be given each contestant to win some kind of a medal. For instance, the first unprovided entrant will be given a start on the others, and a medal will be given by F. L. C. Martin for the greatest speed, by THE PRESS for the member of local or the high school making the best time, and special prizes by many others.

The race will be for twenty miles, starting at Scott's woods. The riders will go around the block bounded by South avenue, Fanwood road, Front and Richmond streets three times, then out South avenue to Front, stake and return—far enough to complete the twenty miles—and finish at Scott's. THE PRESS would suggest as handicappers, F. L. C. Martin, J. Harvey Doane and F. E. Stevens. The date will be fixed for some day this month. Entries may now be made at F. L. C. Martin's, 69 Park avenue, or at J. Harvey Doane's, 11 Park avenue. The fee is fifty cents.

A Veteran Soldier Discharged From the Government Service.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—Allow me, with other Republicans, through the columns of your paper, to protest against the removal of Mr. Mackey from the carrier service in this city.

Mr. Mackey was a brave soldier and has a war record of which to be proud. He served the Republic nearly four years, was wounded twice and endured the torture's of Libby Prison over six months. For this he has never asked a pension which has the services had been recognized by his appointment as mail carrier, and in which capacity he has faithfully served the public. To be to be ruthlessly set aside for alleged partisan reasons is an insult to every soldier and sufficient to arouse the indignation of every justice-loving citizen be he Republican or Democrat.

H. CONSERVATOR.

The Earth of Civilization in the Sarcouch.

The carpet on the floor of the borough council chamber is now to be taken up and shaken, and the room is to be scrubbed and aired, for the first time in three years. Also, $50 is to be expended in providing chairs for the firemen to sit on, in their meeting room.

AN ACTIVE CHARITY.

Cook County Hospital a Shelter for the Sick or Dying.

Quarters for Both Sexes—A Place for the Unborn and the Dead—Many Entries to a Single Day—Sanitary Improvements.

[Special Chicago Letter.]

A family of eight hundred souls; a home which lies within its own narrow borders, nurses and drug store, grocery, market and dry goods; a little world in itself that half the people in Chicago have never seen, yet an active stupendous charity, for it is a refuge for the sick, wounded and dying; a place where a child may be born, where unconscious clay may be prepared for burial.

The long, sunny corridors, the large, well-ventilated wards, with rows and rows of iron beds covered with snowy counterpanes and supplied with comfortable pillows, must seem like a glimpse of Heaven to some of the poor inmates.

"Oh, yes," you admit, hesitatingly, "but it must be dreadful to lie there sick and in pain yourself, and be forced to listen to the agonized groans of sufferers near you, to be touched with unloving hands; to have strange faces around you in the hour of pain; to see the folding screen brought in and inclosed a bed. I know that the touch of the death angel's wing is falling across the pillow, and that a human life is passing away."

True enough, oh ye dwellers in luxurious homes, but if you had always lived in a damp cellar, or a crowded tenement house where shrill-tongued women and drunken men fight, quarrel like demons; where the sound of horrible cursing mingles with a poisoned, loathsome atmosphere; if your bed had always been a heap of straw, alive with vermin that skip and crawl, you would think that you had drifted into Paradise, when you were laid between those clean white sheets, and have no odor but disinfectants greet your nostrils.

But, my brethren and sisters, these things were not always so.

Mr. G. W. Deal, the warden, is a practical builder and mechanic—a firm believer in cause and effect, and in his own peculiar style, quite a genealogist, for, when he smells a fault, he looks up its pedigree and locates its source at home.

He is progressive, at least he is a hundred or two years in advance of Noah, who used to ventilate the ark by letting the windows down from the top. This primitive method was in vogue at the hospital not withstanding the fresh air issued at four different floors. When properly manipulated, the original system of ventilation is particularly fine; the stench is driven into the attic by suction and the heat is distributed in the wards through registers near the ceiling, while the cold air is let into the registers near the floor. On the ground floor this system does not prevail, instead the steam radiators are stationed in front of the windows. He has boxed in these radiators with galvanized iron, perforated on the top, and communicating with the outside air by raising the window five inches and returning the box under the same, thus taking in a constant supply of fresh air which is heated and sent through the perforations into the wards. The wheeled stretchers formerly in use were on clumsy rasters, and often broke down while in use, thus adding fresh pain from the operating table to the bed. They were sent to a wagon maker and supplied with springs which rest on a platform truck, and man's frailty lessened.

One sees strange sights in the wards of this vast building. There is the leper, a hideous object whose broad chest and powerful arms are covered with scars where the doctors have removed his leprous skin. One feels like to wonder he threatens suicide, for the brawn and muscle simply furnish food for this terrible disease.

An error to be remembered once was that of a young colored lad who had both feet frozen so that amputation of the toes was necessary. It was a shocking sight when the nurse lifted the sheet, for the feet and ankles were swollen to twice their natural size, which is considerable in a large, loose jointed negro like this boy. Over the black skin was turned almost red by the intense fever, the straight line where

The fabulous aspects of his career became almost incredible. Beholding how Columbus worked his mind with all the gathered knowledge of his day, how he urged before universities and learned men the feasibleness and safety of his plans, based in part on his personal conjectures and in part on his experience and his research into the works of time of steadfast preparation he staked his hopes upon magnates, archbishops, friends and princes, and finally, after how learning and calculation entered into his plans as much as intuition and genius, tragic success, and profound to discover therein revelations such as God made of old to his prophets, and perceived to the church how important. I attribute such exceptional treatment of Columbus to the fact that genius alone and discovers exert a potent influence upon the imagination; and yet they hold a lesser place in popular history than statesmen or warriors. How much more important would it be in our day to have such a man as Columbus dwell than to know who won the battle of Arbela! The fact is that, propagated in such volumes as to statecraft and to war with these treating of labor and industry, one is amazed at the indifference and incredible disproportion. I can understand why this should have been so in ages when manual toil was considered degrading, and when trade, relegated to the common herd, who were prohibited by debarred from coping with the patrician classes, was despised. But, even in our day, transcendantly the age of labor and of industry, while the names of great commanders are borne on the world-wide wings of fame, those of discoverers fall with the utmost ease into ungrateful oblivion. For one Gabrani, one Franklin, one Tegnerre, one Edison, who has spread his renown among all classes and gained for its inventor forever with his name, what a vast number of unremembered or unknown glories!

The peoples of the future, will not be so ungrateful. The first years of this century will grow in memory and importance, not by reason of those Napoleonic victories, whose gorilla renown is a reproach to humanity, but rather because of another and better title to glory, that voltaic pile, inaugurating the all-life which is to be and by its chemicals and metals engendering currents and forces as though it were a mighty organism, and by its dynamos and telegraphs, a nervous system of universal progress. Then the little cot marks a tiny babe whose sanity is a matter-of-fact truism, and over in the corner a beautiful Magdalen almost hidden from view under the bed clothes; a heavy weight hangs to her ankle, and her bed is much shorter than the others—the muscle has contracted above the knee, leaving a hole like the collapsed orifice of a ruptured pile. A fragile little creature, with flesh as transparent as porcelain ware, his dying with consumption. But the last cot of all is a black-eyed, curly-headed little Arab—a lovely child whom the hospital has named Alice. "How can you be so heartless?" I exclaimed to the nurse in charge of the wards. "I do not feel heartless," she answered, "but it doesn't matter much where we die, but it makes a heap of difference where we live here. We have the most modern appliances, and not by sudden chance would never have taken place.

clusters here, the woman who has been many times a mother; the young girl, God pity her! Now she is to be cast on every hospital the world over; the deserted, the improvident, all such as their turn occupy a little room, and bring forth as immortal souls and these flocks always live. Poor mother's kill them if you poured scalding water on them.

When you finally leave the hospital—either cured or dead—there are yet two places to visit. If you are alive the nurse goes to the custodian's office and gets your little sealed package of valuables which during your sickness has been locked in a vault. Poor, pitiful little trifles—a lock of hair—a bunch of keys—a few pennies—but if this constitutes your sole earthly possession, it gives you something to begin housekeeping with—you don't start out quite empty-handed.

And if you are dead? Well, you are carried to the morgue. Doubtless you have seen it, a fine, new, comfortable building, which has perforations opening into a large pipe connecting with a sewer. When the ups and downs of fortune of your death have been discovered and officially noted, you are carried up in a clean, white cloth—if it was a fever and had a stamp and placard, one would imagine you were a mummy—then, of course your feet are left uncovered, so that a tag with your number on it can be tied to your great toe. A number—that's all, some of us have a silver plate, but it all amounts to the same thing. There is really nothing left of us when death has foreclosed, our bodies are only "remains," our greedily hoarded treasure only "an estate."

But it means life or death to thousands of people in Cook county, whether the warden of this great hospital is a large-hearted, broad-minded, far-seeing man, ready to correct abuses and stop leakages, whether the sanitary measures are the most perfect that human ingenuity can devise, whether the nurses are humane and the doctors are skilful and conscientious. Oh, yes, if you were a patient in the Cook County hospital you would realize the importance of their trust.

THE FAME OF COLUMBUS.

The Discoverer's Great Voyage the Outcome of Several Inventions.

Emilio Castelar, the famous Spanish statesman, in writing about Columbus expresses the following sentiments in a recent number of the Century: I attribute the immortal good fortune of this portentous hero to his martyrdom; or, in other words, to the virtue and efficacy involved in the sacrifice of suffering. That persistent struggle of the discoverer with superstition, prior to his wonderful success, and following that struggle, after his wonderful success, with his own envy, with ingratitude, encircled his brow with a crown of thorns, of which every one that pierced his temples while he lived became at his death a

JOHN P. ALTGELD.

Something About the Democratic Candidate for Governor of Illinois.

John P. Altgeld was born in Germany in 1847 and came to this country while yet a child. He spent the early part of his life on a farm in Ohio. At the age of sixteen he joined the union army and served in the ranks for six months around Richmond. After the war he taught school for a number of terms in Ohio. On arriving at the age of twenty-one he determined to look for fortune and reputation in the west, so he left Ohio and traveled across the southern part of Illinois on foot to St. Louis. When he reached that city he was without funds. After a short stay in St. Louis he concluded to push farther west and went to southern Kansas, which at that time was the home of the doctors or after Mr. Altgeld's arrival the boom broke, and finding no opening he again moved. This time he settled in the northwestern part of Missouri, where he taught school and studied law at the same time. In 1873 he was admitted to the bar and was appointed city attorney for Savanna. He was afterwards elected county attorney for that district county.

Feeling the need of a broader field he in 1875 came to Chicago. He at once began to take an active interest in politics, though not an active part. As an attorney he rapidly built up a large clientage. His connection with the Storey will case gained him some publicity.

In 1884 he made his first appearance in politics, being nominated to congress from the Fourth district. He made an aggressive campaign, but was defeated. Two years later he was nominated for a superior court judgeship. His candidacy was indorsed by the labor organizations and he was successful at the election by a large majority.

Even while engaged in politics he gave attention to and made money out of his ever-increasing practice and is now the owner of a large quantity of valuable real estate in the business district of Chicago.

Mr. Altgeld has acquired some fame as a writer. Besides a large number of papers on the pertinent questions of the day he has published two works—"Our Penal Machinery and Its Victims" and "Live Questions." Last June Judge Altgeld resigned his position on the bench, his business interests demanding his whole attention.

In person the democratic nominee for governor is below the medium height, deep-chested and broad-backed, but without any tendency toward corpulency. His head, which is large, is a point, is of a reddish brown, while his hair is of a darker shade. His deep-set blue eyes are full of fire when angry and go a great way toward softening up the general rigid contour of the face. In manner he is genial and puts the visitor at ease immediately.

MINISTER TO JAPAN.

The Young Chittenden Recently Honored by President Harrison.

Frank L. Coombs, who succeeds the late John F. Swift as United States minister to Japan, is another of the fortunate young men whom President Harrison has honored with appointments to important posts in the diplomatic service. Mr. Coombs, says Harper's Weekly, is a lawyer of Napa, Cal., and is thirty-six years old. He was elected district attorney of Napa county when only twenty-four, and at the conclusion of his term of office was reelected. In 1886 the republicans nominated him for the assembly, and, though the district is strongly democratic, he carried it by a handsome majority. He was reelected to the legislature in 1888, and again in 1890, when he was chosen speaker. Mr. Coombs is regarded as one of the ablest party leaders in California, and outside of the state he is well known among breeders of fine stock for his interest in thoroughbred horseflesh.

A BRIDGE OF SALT.

A Curiosity, Partly Natural and Partly Artificial.

Salt Pinnacles in the Death Valley of Colorado—The Only Road on Earth That Was Graded Backwards with Success.

The natural wonders of Death valley have probably been more minutely and extensively described by professional writers than any other spot they never saw. No wonder Barnum, when a New York Sun correspondent found Dogtown, Col., but a few miles from those untraveled scribes. In 1883 some borax works were built on the east side of the valley, a couple of miles or so above the mouth of Furnace Creek canyon. The road thence to the railroad led down the east side of the valley for several miles, and then had to cross over to the west side because no drinking water could be had on the east side below Furnace creek. Moreover, the land on the west side was much better for a road. But how to get the wagons across the valley was a problem. From end to end the center of the valley is one long salt marsh, and in most places it is so soft and wet that even a dash would need snowshoes to insure his safety. Some portion of the valley floor has been crusted over. This crust is in places very thin and brittle, and not only in one locality does it seem to be first. Wherever this crust lies deep and thorough a thin, slimy salt sand has been found to be of unmeasurable depth—unmeasurable with any line or pole. Dr. C. Hart Merriam's corps of scientists cut through in one place and easily shoved a pole down fifteen feet, and there is no guessing how much deeper the slime was.

However, a road must be had, and so the work was begun over a part of the marsh where the crust seemed to be thickest and consisted it with sticks, bunches of grass and whatever else was at hand, and in certain places where

AN OLD ILLINOIS TOWN.

St. Charles Once the Metropolis of the Prairie State.

Now It Has Almost as Many Relics, in Proportion to Its Size, as Mount Vernon—Architecture of Early Days.

[Special Chicago Letter.]

"How terribly overworrying is here I'd like to say," writing that has been faint reminiscences to a rainy, at least, one that looks as though it might be one of its kind—a regular Chicago gray traveler, as we stood looking at the new tall building on the north corner of Dearborn streets Chicago. He had spent much long abroad and the changes oppressed rather than exhilarated him.

"Well, come with me," I replied, "and we'll get away from it all. We will be in a town which has almost as many ruins in proportion to its size as Rome."

"All right, I'm with you," was his answer.

Accordingly, we hastened to the station and purchased tickets for the dreamy old town of St. Charles, Ill.

A little more than one hour's ride over the level prairie brought us to a small depot, fussy in fresh red paint and surrounded by a few grassless green and bare environments of a new town.

"And you call this old?" exclaimed my friend. "Why, the very newness of everything is positively offensive."

"Wait until I have shown you the old settlement," I replied, remembering that there was a time when this place was ahead of Chicago in population, industry and attractiveness, and when the latter pushed [illegible] in contempt past the mud flats about Fort Dearborn for a chance to secure a location near the busy mills of St. Charles, the illiterate town on the Fox river.

The cedar walk from the depot brought us under the magnificent old trees of the village common.

At our right hand as we enter the corner of the park, is an ancient church, built of native limestone, now plastered over with rough mortar, which has fallen off in many places, giving it a very forlorn appearance. The windows are boarded up and the flock of cooing doves which inhabit its square belfry are the only signs of life shown in. The entire premises are inclosed along the side street with a high wall of the same material as the church. Next to the church, which was the birthplace of the religious sect known as Free Methodists, and likewise was a time-honored place of spiritualism, stands an immense red brick house, with towering cupolas and chimneys. One might almost imagine himself holding at the "House of the Seven Gables" which Nathaniel Hawthorne's weird fancy has immortalized.

The adobe-like walls of the ancient church and the old-fashioned red brick of the old dwellings are characteristics of the architecture of the entire town, and give it perhaps a more antiquated appearance than it really deserves. Wherever one may wander in the rambling old town, buildings of these descriptions are to be in sight. The accompanying illustration is an excellent pencil sketch of one of the humbler of these dwellings.

To the earlier inhabitants of St. Charles this leafy common is instinct with veritable associations. It was the village forum, and consequently the scene of almost every important and startling event which touched the public life of the community. Here was the scene of the most exciting episodes in the pioneering of the state; and but a few rods from the square is still standing the little wooden frame cottage in which the students of the first medical school in Illinois witnessed the first dissection ever held. A physician named Richards was the founder of the medical college. He was universally believed to be a man of unusual learning, courage and ability, and the school was well patronized from the start, as there was naturally a demand for more doctors in so new a country. The school encounters its greatest difficulty in obtaining bodies for dissection. The pupils were as interested as their teacher in seeing that an occasional body was procured for their instruction, and were doubtless not always particular to fully acquaint Dr. Richards with all their plans along this line. Certainly this seems to have been the case in regard to the unfortunate proceeding which precipitated the riot and ruined the school. An overzealous student, accompanied by certain dare-devil companions, drove recently to a settlement near Sycamore and exhumed the grave the body of a young woman. Through the carelessness of the ghouls the suspicions of the community were aroused, and the mischief was immediately discovered. A formidable posse of citizens from the outraged village of Sycamore hastily organized. Mounted and armed, they invaded St. Charles. Gathering in the old common ground all the leaders incited their followers to violence and revenge.

It was in vain that some of the most prominent and influential citizens of the county made eloquent pleas for reasonable and conservative action against violence and bloodshed. The excited mob was determined and made an assault upon the house in which Dr. Richards, his family and several students were intrenched. The building was barricaded with stones, bricks and every kind of missile which the mob could pick up.

At last, through the partially open door, a gleam of Dr. Richards' face revealed. It is thought that he was upon the point of addressing the mob, but quickly shut the door. But it was a little too late, for one of the rioters rushed forward and fired.

The ball passed through the door and into Dr. Richards' side. It is said that the person who fired the shot was one of the husbands of the young women whose body had been stolen; but there is no evidence at this day to prove it.

The occupants of the house then began to retreat through the rear of the yard. It was an exciting scene which none of the participants are likely to forget.

In the attraction of the house another well-aimed ball dropped one of the students. He died soon after. He was, according to common belief, the last fatal in the crime. Although Dr. Richards and his family and the students had all made their escape in safety, the mob, not satisfied with the destruction of the medical college, proceeded to the house of Dr. Richards, and did a large amount of damage in fighting the [illegible] while chickens remain, there is no doubt but that the injury received in the riot was the only fatality. Search was made for the assailant, but the offender escaped and was not discovered.

It is also here that Lovejoy and other Pioneer abolition leaders made many of their speeches in the early days of the anti-slavery agitation.

It is also noted in another Illinois town connection to the more ancient and interesting history of the state. Fort Dearborn, the mediæval Chicago and the [illegible] of the Indian massacre, and Fort Peter Burchell, the [illegible] of the Indian massacre, and Fort Peter Burchell and deported charmed with his ready wit and rude logic.

His favorite resort was the center for the "city dances" and other important social festivities. The old ballroom, in which these gay scenes were given celebrated, has now fallen into complete decay, and the sounds of its revelry, like the voice of the genial host, are now but memories.

One of the latest of these picturesque old town inns that from the strength of the old town into the beautiful cemetery, which commands one of the most delightful views in the vicinity. "Mother Howard," whose fame as a hostess for fortune-tellers made the town a sort of Mecca for those in search of knowledge not to be gained by the ordinary avenues. Her powers of divination were certainly remarkable.

But a new spirit is abroad in the old town. The new railway has provided the magnificent private park of an old resident and converted it into one of the most popular resorts for the people accessible to the world's fair city. It has been appropriately named "Hotel Hawthorne," and it is the intention of that name once launched their way and traveling easier and it their opened fires, the land inhabitants of the great city now retreat for a day of rest and recreation to the pleasant old shaded trees, dancing in the "grand stand" of a handsome boathouse, or rowing, in the swift current, upon the beautiful Fox to Scott's ford, where the racelute old general dragged his cannon along a trail, still visible, in pursuit of Black Hawk. Those who may visit this quaint old town will find it, as did my rain-happy friend, a gem of many dwellings. I half [illegible] allowed—as in a scene of enchanting beauty.

AT MINNEAPOLIS.

Memories of the Historic Gathering of Republicans.

The Newspaper Boys According to Our Correspondent, Had a Hard Time of It—A Glance Down Memory Lane and Lizzie Reminiscences.

[Special Minneapolis Letter.]

This week in Minneapolis has been almost a duplicate of a week in Washington. Of course it has not been a thousand new faces, many new streets, new hotels, new scenes and new surroundings, but it has been all the old faces, all of the old politicians, many of the old scenes, many of the old representatives, all of the old office-holders, the old claimants and the old station, political wrecks who come to Washington constantly, and there has been scarcely a variation in the monody of new work.

We have had the usual quadrennial complement and assortment of political freaks with us. In every committee room, in every one of the political headquarters, in all the hotel lobbies and corridors, in the street-cars and upon the streets we have been obliged to listen to the alleged wisdom of cranks who know it all in advance of any one of them knowing it differently; and all of them preaching from distinctive premises and from diverging and clashing political conclusions. These cranks, who appear in force at every national convention, do not wear hoofs nor horns, long finger-nails nor long unkempt hair and beard. They are not, many of them, well dressed, well fed, well groomed and enthusiastic in a genteel and cultured manner in behalf of their favorite son from his state before whom he would willingly bow down and worship.

One of the peculiar characteristics of the quadrennial convention crank always is that there is never a crank who has selected to be the national standard bearer of his party is nominated by the convention; the other fellow will surely be defeated.

You may well imagine what a hard time we newspaper men have had. For we were reading back and forth, sounding every minute as precious and valuable to us as gold, silver or corporate stones, to be obliged for politeness' sake to waste any of those minutes in memorizing the people of alleged genius in politics and society, as they had set by the button-hole and pinned to their coat lapels for their own benefit. There is in the history of each one of such people a large share of the ridiculous and a large share of the sublime. They are all likes of baseball cranks, or race-track cranks, each one of them is sure to win, and each one has put on the winner. There are cranks in the shape of statesmen, cranks in the shape of newspaper men and cranks in the shape of ladies and cranks in the shape of the fair sex. But each and every one of them has the contingency of the non-appearance of his particular favorite. We shall have a duplication of these same scenes in Chicago a few days hence.

Unquestionably the most popular headquarters—that is, popular with the masses of all classes—were the Algonquin at the West Hotel. Col. Duffield, Hon. Hopkins, Editor Gelatt, of the Detroit Tribune; Postmaster Bahne, of the Detroit post office; Hon. Sam R. Burrows, O'Donnell and Belknap, Private Secretary Bahne and Hon. S. S. Olds, all bright, entertaining Michigan men, rival with each other in receiving visitors and making them feel at home. The genial host, Col. Duffield, did a rushing business with delegates and managed the political work with ability and integrity.

The reporters for the local papers had the hardest time of it. There were representatives of the Minneapolis Journal, Times and Tribune; the St. Paul Dispatch, News, Globe and Pioneer Press, as well as country editors galore from every city and town in Minnesota. They all tried to make the convention a state affair. Joel Heatwole, the handsome editor of the Northfield News, was so willing to accept the sponsorship of the Gopher state if it is brought to him on a platter, was everywhere solicitously seen. Editor Mehl, Joe Merriam, ex-Congressman Knute Nelson and Congressman Lind were present, ready for the purpose of meeting Minnesota editors and letting themselves into close contact with the makers of public opinion, so that the republican gubernatorial nomination may not be obliged to go hunting the man all over the state without finding him when the proper time comes. It seemed to me that this matter was paramount in their minds over the question of a presidential nomination, which brought everybody else to the twin cities.' However, all of the visitors to the Flour city are under more or less obligations to those gentlemen for acts of courtesy and entertainment.

One of the first things which dawned upon the minds of hundreds of visitors was the fact that there are not enough eating houses in the twin cities to accommodate so many people. True, there was enough to eat; but everybody had to wait for somebody else to be supplied. The fortunate ones who managed to secure rooms at the hotels were well cared for. Meals were supplied to guests in good order, and the food furnished was well served. But the poor delegates, who wandered hungry and lackeraven were hungry all the time, because the regular bars in the could get but one good meal a day; so that many a good fellow was obliged to satisfy himself with a ham sandwich, bread, a slice of pie or a hastily made sandwich of some kind. Coffee, in some cases it was only hot water slightly colored, brought ten cents per cup, and none of the cups were of such enormous dimensions as to cause complaint, while some of them were full of grounds for complaint. Hundreds of dollars were spent by people who had to walk forth on the cars from Minneapolis to St. Paul, seeking better facilities for gratifying their appetites. The Ryan and Merchants of St. Paul, and the West and Nicollet of Minneapolis, were obliged to serve meals to their guests after attending to their regular guests. The great Northern at Minneapolis and other lake resorts did noble work in taking care of the hungry, and their meals furnished were as good as could be found anywhere upon the continent.

I can only give you an outline idea of the convention, and an outsiderview. The things which were visible to mortal eye were but a small part of the great work done. The great party leaders did their work and made their slates in secret. The great committees did the work of masses of excited, murmuring, gesticulating humanity. You can imagine, better than I can describe, the condition of affairs when "order" was demanded. The silence in the throng of twelve thousand people was something sublime. That is, everybody imagined himself in order, but everybody was whispering and talking in undertones, so that there was at no time complete order, such as we always expect to find in congress, and occasionally in the home of representatives, in the national capital.

The speeches were many, as it always is in an old-timer, a bore. The grandiloquent perorations and oratorical periods, the unanimous nominations, the made-to-order occasions of unanimous cheering; all these were features of the occasion. The telegraph wires were longer boys were rushed to death carrying special telegrams from the press galleries to the anxious people. The boys which carried intelligence to the universe by chained lightning.

John Sherwood, of the Chicago Express, and Perry Heath, of the Indianapolis Journal, were talking Harrison every hour and all the time. They nominated on Saturday night, June 4, as soon as we all reached Minneapolis, and say the same word: "Harrison," and they were soon unable to utter any other sound. Whether or not they had visions of cabinet positions in their cat-nap dreams, nobody but themselves could tell.

But strangest of all the strange things was the Blaine atmosphere. No sooner were we established at the various hotels, than politicians from every section swooped down upon us, saying: "Now, newspaper fellows, know everything. What are the prospects of James G. Blaine? Now, as a matter of fact, we have no more idea than the man in the moon as to what Blaine will do, nobody else does; but every fellow looked and said: "I cannot say," or some sort of an equivalent. Ninety-nine per cent of the people here, Mr. Blaine, and there is no more anything of his mind, day nor night, public or private, and at that time we did not know whether he had any mind or not.

We are all glad that this epoch of peace and worry is over and only wish that the next one may be in the early spring of the year. During the interim between the conventions, nearly all of us will spend the time in this invigorating northwestern atmosphere. We shall have at least a few days of comparative rest. As I told you last week, it is a great treat to be able to attend a national convention as a looker-on; but it is anything but a picnic to be obliged to attend as a sleepless worker—a white slave for a newspaper.

SMITH D. FRY.

Curtis About Returning.

There's all kinds of people in Oakland who has his doubts about the immortality of human affairs, and he is a serious one, at that. He came into town to put on his office door when he is going out temporarily notice somewhat of this character:

"Gone to lunch; back in half an hour."

"Gone to court; back in three hours."

"Gone out to see a man; back in ten minutes."

And so on, as the circumstances may require, and, as he is a prompt man, orders are generally successful in waiting for him.

One day lately a caller found this:

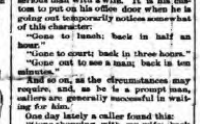
"Gone skating with my wife; back the Lord only knows when."—Oakland Echoes.

ABDEL HAMID'S LIFE.

To Be Better if Turkey Is Not an Unchristian Power.

Considering the surroundings in which he lives, the intelligence that the sultan Abdul Hamid is a fine fellow and a man of honor and sensibility is considered a very dull day in Constantinople when evidence of a plot of some sort to send his estimable body into the beacon of the prophet is not unearthed by the horde of detectives which are constantly employed. Even Chicago people can understand that, too, how the able detective may sometimes unearth a plot where none exists to demonstrate the fidelity of his *watching his services, and it is not at all improbable that the oriental sleuth is well up in the tenets of his profession. Since the recent investigation of the Rustchuk bomb affair and the discoveries which it was intended to bring against the sultan, the guards around the imperial apartments have been doubled.

The sultan is always protected by Nubians (blacks) and Albanians



ABDUL HAMID II.

(whites), for these two regiments execrate each other and in their divisions the padishah feels secure. The "Black Guards" are his favorites, for they are so exceedingly fierce when they have any cutting-down work to do and they are so much more than that they [illegible] lana, whose claws are always being extended for backscratch. Taking them all round, however, the two corps of Pretorians, black and white, form a gang of unmitigated scoundrels. They are superb looking fellows, and are generally dressed, overpaid and enjoying practical immunity for every crime they may commit, except that of being negligent on duty. They are the terror of the whole country surrounding the palace and the sultan himself is so afraid of them that he is constantly trying to bribe them into loyalty by gifts of money.

While the half-starved Turkish soldiers in Macedonia, Armenia and Anatolia often remain for weeks without pay, the Nubians and Albanians are comfortably quartered and "fed" which sometimes amount to seventy-five dollars per man. The two corps have only to quarrel and the sultan immediately sets himself to smooth matters by pouring down a golden shower into their respective laps. On the 1st of May a soldier of one corps misbehaves by showing himself insubordinate or by going to sleep on guard and then soldiers of the other corps are called upon to operate upon him. Then there is a private struggling or a private [illegible] thadoing, as the case may be. But in either event the work is executed with dispatch and gusto.

A VEGETABLE SPONGE.

The Plant in Its Natural State and Prepared for Use.

A correspondent in Kern county, Cal., sends the San Francisco Chronicle specimens of a peculiar growth which for lack of a better name may be called a vegetable sponge. The plant from which they are obtained is a native of Japan, is of the gourd family and the name given is the Japan. It is of a luxuriant growth, sending out heavy vines to a length of twenty or thirty feet. Abundant crops of gourds similar to those in the illustration are produced and these, while edible when tender, are highly prized as a flavoring constituent in soups and other foods, for which purpose they are cut up in small slices like okra.

When fully grown the interior of the gourd becomes a fibrous, spongy mass, and this is separated from the shell and cleaned by boiling in a lye, for which a large quantity of soda or soap has been added. After being thus treated the resultant fiber is dried and when taken on a sponge-like appearance. For all the uses to which sponges are put this vegetable fiber seems well adapted, having been tested in the bath, in the household and in the stable. The hottest water does not injure it. It is very flexible and soft, and it is durable as well.

The correspondent who has been making the tests is very enthusiastic over the results, and believes in the near future it will have been made to what will become a very important industry. Specimens of the plant can be seen on the ground in its natural state and also of the fiber after being prepared for use.

SOUTH AMERICAN LIFE.

Wonderful Strength and Activity of the Mexico Porters.

Thirty Feet Burden—Only Two Articles Products of the Earth—Sleeping Places in Small—Negroes of Rio Janeiro.

Travelers in South America rarely fail to remark the great strength and agility of the native porters, and, in many parts of that country, the only means of transportation is by carrying up steep mountain roads on the edges of dangerous precipices, and across running streams, perhaps only by a fallen tree, under which you must stoop or stagger, and which could not be supported by any two-footed beast without the aid of a regiment if it happens and miners to go to advance a piano on a road. The strength of these porters, whose diet rarely includes anything more than the farinaceous food of the earth, and sometimes consists solely of bananas or boiled plantains, is often surprising. It is not an uncommon thing for an India-rubber gatherer to transport a load of from 200 to 300 lbs., a weight of one hundred and fifty pounds before his day's task is ended, piloting his way through the densest thickets and climbing the most precipitous ridges, making his pile as he goes, without ever losing his sure-footedness than a few bananas or a crust in his pocket.

Baird, a traveler in South America, nearly half a century ago, gave a graphic description of the negro porters of Brazil. We are indebted to his account for the following paragraph as well as the accompanying sketch, which we copy from Le Tour du Monde:

"I left my work this day, but by curiosity to ascertain the amount of the strange sounds which I heard from one end of the street to the other. On investigation I found it was a party moving. There was a great procession of negroes, each one of whom carried a piece of furniture, large or small, heavy or light, as it happened. All marched keeping step, repeating a syllable or two or giving utterance to a musical sound. Some carried small packs forming a huge volume three times the size of their own. At the end of this procession of perhaps fifty persons, carrying a piano, came a negro riding on the backs of six men. One of these performed the functions of the [illegible] orchestra, holding an object resembling a silver water-pitcher, in which there were some little pebbles, and this instrument the negro beat the measure in a very lively fashion. On another day I saw the negro without this instrument in his carriage a dignified, which many women of the white race would claim as their own."

A Wonderful Tale.

"When I was going on the [illegible] see some fifteen years ago," said the man with the cigarette to the Indianapolis Journal, "a white-haired old man along and carried off my watch. BUILT ON THE LAKES.

Inland Shipbuilders Compete Successfully with Ocean-Going Vessels.

There was recently launched from the shipyards of the Globe iron works at Cleveland the second vessel built for the United States on the Great Lakes since the war, the lighthouse tender Lilac. The first government vessel was the lighthouse construction boat Amaranth, launched at the Cleveland Shipbuilding Company's yards a few months ago. It is not as a lighthouse tender Columbine, is soon to be laid on the stocks at the Globe yards. The Lilac and Columbine, when they are put together give high government sanction to the claim of lake shipbuilders that they can compete on equal terms with the seaboard yards, for both vessels are intended for ocean service. The Lilac will be 150 on the Portland (Me.) district and the Columbine on the Portland (Ore.) one.

The picture of the Lilac here given resembles the Columbine as well. Both are of Siemens-Martin mild steel and as fine in appearance as the costly steam yachts recently built at the Cleveland yards. They will be 150 feet in length over all, 26 feet 6 inches beam and 15 feet depth of hold. They are built with extra precautions against disaster and with double bottom, watertight bulkheads and the strongest construction, and will be as nearly indestructible as modern science can make steamboats. Both will be rigged as two-masted schooners, with pole topmasts, fore and aft [illegible] and will be fully equipped with steam [illegible] gear, steam windlass, electric search-light and all modern improvements.

THE LILAC.

The engines are of the fore and aft compound pattern, with two [illegible] 10 feet 6 inches in diameter by 10 feet 6 inches long. They are guaranteed to develop 500 indicated horse power when making the revolutions a minute, with a coal consumption of 2½ pounds per horse power per hour. The lighthouse board are highly pleased with the Lilac, and pronounce her a perfect beauty. They have no doubt, that she will meet the strictest requirements of the government. Both contracts were obtained in open competition with seaboard yards.

NEW USE FOR ESCORTS.

Every woman who wears the trailing skirt knows how very difficult it is to button the gloves, if the toilet has been hurried and consequently the [illegible] tion being performed in the street, without letting the gown drag on the ground. If the material is delicate in hue or texture it is rhin to even go a little distance through the dirt of the sidewalks. A young girl and her escort created considerable amusement on one occasion on the corner of Chestnut street, says the Philadelphia Times, by holding up her gown while she struggled with a refractory glove button. It was very funny, but one could not help admiring the ingenuity of the girl and the chivalry of the man.

Sure Signs of Death.

The public is often startled by the interment of living persons supposed to be dead. The Scientific Dispatch says: One of the simplest and best tests is the blister. A case is cited of the supposed corpse in front of a candle flame. A sure evidence of life is a tinge of red at the side of the flame. Dr. Martigot now asserts that an unfailing test may be made by holding a candle to the hand of the subject. A blister will soon be formed, which will always soon appear. The presence of any fluid in the blister is a certain evidence of life; but if, on the contrary, the blister contains only steam, it may be taken for granted that life is extinct. Dr. Martigot shows that these phenomena are simply the result of natural laws and that the test is conclusive as the test is simple.

THE NATIONAL DEMOCRATIC CONVENTION.

The National Democratic Committee, at a meeting held in the city of Washington, D. C., has appointed Tuesday, the 21st day of June, 1892, as the time, and chosen the City of Chicago as the place for, holding the national Democratic convention. Each State is entitled to a representation therein equal to double the number of the representation to which it is entitled in the next electoral college, and each territory and the District of Columbia shall have two delegates. All Democratic conservative citizens of the United States, irrespective of past political associations and differences, who can unite with us in the effort for pure, economical and constitutional government, are cordially invited to join us in sending delegates to the convention.

CALVIN S. BRICE, Chairman.
SIMON P. SHERRIS, Secretary.

HARRISON AND REID.

The Republican National Convention at Minneapolis last week evidently partook more of the character of a wrangling mass meeting than a dignified representative body, a large percentage of the delegates, all called being interested Federal office-holders, flanked by numerous dusky partisans of questionable standing.

It cannot be denied that estimable Republicans were members of the Convention, men of personal good repute and ability, but, taken as a whole, it certainly showed sad degeneration from the party organization of Lincoln, Grant and Sherman, the glory of whose leadership is faintly sustained by their political successors.

After bitter factional strife between the adherents of Harrison and Blaine, the former secured the nomination for President, and then, the singular, if not absurd selection of Whitelaw Reid, editor of the New York Tribune, as a Vice-Presidential candidate was hastily declared.

Why was Mr. Morton so rudely thrust aside?

Is not his record as honorable as that of President Harrison?

The distinction between Harrison and Blaine as Presidential candidates is obvious. Mr. Harrison represents the extreme ideas of partisan Republicanism, war tariff taxation for the benefit of monopoly interests, force in the control of elections, and extravagant expenditure of public money, measures repudiated by the people in the General elections of 1890, while Mr. Blaine, more intelligent, liberal and farseeing, would, as President blend practical statesmanship with official action. Besides, Mr. Blaine has many elements of personal popularity which Mr. Harrison does not possess.

The Democrats are content with the political outlook, and from their Chicago Convention of June 21st will be heard the bugle blast of VICTORY.

A PURCHASED NOMINATION.

The Republican Convention was probably the most corrupt assemblage of its kind in the history of the party or of the country. It was controlled by office-holders and venal Southern delegates who were openly purchased.

In open defiance to the principles of civil-service reform, 130 Federal office-holders were delegates to the convention in behalf of their chief, and hundreds more were working for him on the outside. More than sixty negroes notoriously for sale, according to Republican testimony on both sides, were members of the convention.

Of Mr. Harrison's 535 votes, 244 came from Southern States which are surely Democratic. These votes were his to exchange for favors and rewards past and hoped for.

The President was not the choice of the Republicans of the States that are or have been surely Republican. Even those States he received only 193 votes, while his opponents received 246 votes.

If it were not for the purchased loyalty of the Southern delegates and the selfish, mercenary Jefferson holding delegates Mr. Harrison could not have been nominated. The proceedings at Minneapolis placed a blot upon our political system. They were worse than elections in the Republican rotten boroughs before the passage of the Corrupt Practices act. By as much as the nomination represented a hope of success it was practically a sale of the Presidency to the highest and shrewdest bidders.

It is not credible that such a nomination, so made, will be ratified by the voters.—N. Y. World.

PEOPLE'S POPULARITY AS SHOWN BY THE FIGURES.

(Philadelphia Record.)

The people who ignorantly talk of the decline of Cleveland's popularity from 1888 to 1888 would do well to take a glance at the election returns. In New York Cleveland received 73,811 more votes in 1888 than in 1884; in New Jersey, 15,716 more; in Indiana, 16,023 more, and in Connecticut 7,721 more. New York gave him, 100,000 more votes in 1892 than in 1892, when he was elected Governor of that State by a plurality of nearly 200,000. Although defeated by the electoral college system, his total vote in 1888 was 5,536,542—an increase of 661,256 over his vote in 1884, and a popular plurality of 85,534 over Harrison. Harrison's big plurality over Blaine was 23,005 votes. So far from declining, Cleveland's popularity has increased with accelerating pace, and there is no more striking proof of this fact than in the enthusiasm with which most of the States have elected delegates to nominate him at Chicago, in spite of the intrigues of rivals and politicians.

IT WAS THE SAME IN PLAINFIELD.

The nomination of Harrison caused no demonstration of joy in this city. Not a cannon fired or a flag flung to the breeze! In the history of thirty-two years there will be found no instance in which a Republican nomination for the Presidency has fallen so dead as that just made. Even poor Hayes was better greeted.—New Brunswick Times.

To maintain that Harrison is stronger now among the voters of the Republican party than he was in 1888 would be to maintain that the expectation of getting nothing is a stronger inducement to politicians than the expectation of getting everything.

WON WITH EIGHT MEN.

Baseball Ballers Pluck the Plaids of the Last Two Innings Both in the Field and at the Bat, Alone Turned the Game.

The Crescents are coming to town. They are coming armed in the shape of a baseball nine. They are coming to bring their strongest team. They will bring their strongest nine. They will meet the Y. M. C. A. They will play ball. They will lose. And the money for two pints of the peanut crop will again be spared.

That's what the Elizabeth Journal printed on Saturday before the game. But, oh, what a difference in the playing! However, the Y. M. C. A.'s team played well enough to deserve the game and hard enough to win it.

They made almost twice as many hits as the Crescents, but had the misfortune to be left oftener on bases. They played a gilt-edged game, too, in the field, and Arnold's pitching—after the first inning of the Crescents had been to the bat—was faultless. But every time a run came in sight for Elizabeth, Leddy would pull a two-bagger down out of the sky, or Bowen would strike out a man or two.

And although there is a total of seven hits against the Crescent's pitcher in the score below, don't imagine it was an off day. When it was necessary to shoot the ball out of a good batter's line or vicinity, he did it. Especially was he successful in the eighth inning. After Coogan had got around to third base—through the error of the Elizabeth player whom manager Ferrell put on first in the ninth—Bowen would strike out a man or two.

The game opened before an unusually large crowd, and probably before the next issue of THE CONSTITUTIONALIST the standard-bearer of the Democratic party in the coming great battle will have been named.

The next President must be a Democrat. No perpetual war taxes.

The next President must be a Democrat. No more Force bills.

COUNSELOR MARSH WILL ACCEPT $1.

But the Chancellor Says He Is Going to Put a Stop to Ever Going to Lawyers Throwing Rosaces Into Littleties Without Foundation.

The small army of lawyers who are interested in the estate of Job Male, besieged the chancellor again at Jersey City Monday morning, for an allowance. The Honor responded that it is a mooted which, said the Newark News, filled two of them, ex-governor Bedle and Cook A. Marsh, of Plainfield, with indignation if not a more intense feeling. Last week ex-governor Bedle and Mr. Marsh, representing the proponents of the unsigned will, and ex-chancellor Runyon, ex-senator Sylman Foster Voorhees, of Elizabeth; R. V. Lindabury, of Elizabeth; Charles A. Reed and William Sutliffe of this city, representing the heirs, applied to the court for allowances out of the estate for the services they had rendered in the case. They came together on Monday morning to hear the chancellor's disposition of that application.

The chancellor said that the case was an important one and complicated as to incident, and he was therefore in doubt as to whether he should make any allowance to the proponents. It was so obvious that the will was not a nuncupative one that he did not think he ought to make the estate pay the costs of the attempt to establish it as such. Ex-governor Bedle and Mr. Marsh were greatly surprised at this declaration from the court. Finally the ex-governor asked if the court would hear suggestions, and the chancellor replied that he would, stating that ex-governor Bedle then went over much of his argument of last week, showing the large amount of work he had done and he had performed in the case. As to the declaration of the chancellor that the alleged will was so obviously not a will that it should never have been offered for probate, the ex-governor said that the public feeling in Plainfield was such that those who attempted to establish the will would have been considered derelict in the duty if they had failed to do so. It was further-more submitted to eminent counsel before suit was commenced, and they all scripted the action that was taken. The ex-governor thought that it was a pretty low state of affairs when counsel were to be restrained from doing what they considered their duty through fear of the restrictions of the court.

The chancellor interrupted the ex-governor to say that the court did not intend to cast any reflections upon the counsel in the case. Ex-governor Bedle continued his argument, and as he went on he lost sound of his building, and finally apologetically declared that he did not appear be-fore the court as a mendicant begging for fees. He would get along without a fee-but he spoke for Mr. Marsh, who, he declared, had done nothing but his duty in the matter and was entitled to pay for the time and amount of work he had done in the case. It seemed to him a very extreme case for the court at this time, after allowing the case to proceed to a final decision, to decide that the counsel should not be paid.

"This matter rises above figures," said the chancellor, after he had patiently listened to Mr. Bedle's argument, "and it becomes a question of how far a man's estate can be subjected to litigation for which there is no foundation. I will think over the matter further and dispose of it later."

Mr. Marsh then addressed the court, and with much feeling spoke of the sentiment which had been in the air in the State who had advised him to offer the will for probate. He asked the chancellor to make only a nominal allowance of $1. He was willing, he said, to do all this labor he had performed in the case go without pay, but he begged the court not to impose upon him the humiliation of a refusal to make an allowance would be. He should certainly consider himself humiliated if the court made no allowance whatever. Chancellor Green then repeated his declaration that he did not want to place any stigma or humiliation upon any of the counsel in the case, but that place of action was improper, and it was the duty of the court or the Orphans' court to check them and guard estates jealously. He spoke of the easy matter it was for parties who wanted to get a portion of an estate to attack it in the courts if they are sure the estate will have to pay the costs of the attack.

Ex-Governor Bedle made another speech and the chancellor again said he would look further into the matter. The Chancellor also granted an order to show cause why new administrators for the estate should not be appointed.

In an infant contemporary the next day appeared this:

PUBLIC SCHOOL RECEPTION DAYS.

The Work of the Pupils on to Exhibition.

An examination and visitors may be interested to see the progress in the character and quality of the work of the pupils of the public schools, the teachers have arranged to have a display of available work during the last week of the term. The drawing shown on the walls of Assembly hall in the High school building will give a good idea of the work done in the grammar grades from the lowest primary through the high school. The will show in connected view the work of the school year under the system.

The system is largely in use in Eastern Massachusetts. Miss Larrea, the drawing teacher of this year, is a graduate of Quincy schools and of the Boston Normal Art school. The plan aims to connect a knowledge of geometrical forms with modeling, papercutting and pasteboard construction, and with free hand and original designs developing to mechanical drawing, light and shade with charcoal and crayon, water-colors and artistic designs. Charts and leaf books will give the pupils work in each study in each grade of the schools.

One day of the last week will be given to each of the primary schools. The teachers will be present from 4 to 5:30 in the afternoon to receive any of the parents or friends who may wish to see the work. The reception days of the primaries will be as follows:

Franklin, Monday, June 20; Washington, Tuesday, June 21; Bryant, Wednesday, June 22; Irving, Thursday, June 23; all in the morning following general exercises. Teachers of the grammar and high schools will be present at 9 o'clock Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, from June 20 to 22, in Assembly hall.

Beery Fine for Unlawful Fishing.

A suit brought by Henry Wood against David Dedier, both of Scotch Plains, for the unlawful taking of fish came to trial before justice of the peace Senior at Fanwood last week. The plaintiff is the owner of the lake recently owned by ex-sheriff Cox near Bloomingdale, and has been greatly annoyed by persons fishing there. he being desirous of stving the fish an chance to propagate, all attempts at keeping people away from the pond proved futile, and so Mr. Wood resolved to take advantage of the law made for such cases. Section 13 of "An act to amend and consolidate the several acts relating to game and game fish" reads as follows:

That any person trespassing on any lands for the purpose of taking fish from any private pond, stream or spring, after public notice on the part of the owner, occupant thereof, such notice being posted adjacent to said pond, stream or spring, shall be guilty of trespass, and in addition to damages recoverable by law, shall be liable to the owner, lessee, or occupant, in a penalty of one hundred dollars for every such offense.

The accused were arrested the week before and held to bail before justice of the peace Senior for their appearance for trial before justice Senior. They admitted taking the fish, but claimed that it was from a part of the lake belonging to Zechariah Yeomans. The plaintiff produced evidence showing that he owned the whole of the lake and the territory immediately adjoining it. Justice Senior rendered judgment for the plaintiff for $100 and costs against each of the defendants; the latter gave notice that they would appeal.

The Difference Between National and State Issues.

The Courier-Journal has spoken what hearty approval the silver plank in the Republican platform, and says:

There is no dodging here. It is a safe doctrine, clearly stated, and the upon which honest men should not find it difficult to agree, for they are Democratic friends will not be so explicit on this issue.

But the Philadelphia Ledger, a Republican journal distinguished for its independence, does not agree with the above opinion. It says:

The free coinage is assembly the Republican party in its lack of courageous clearness and firmness. It stands for the timidity of compromise, a sense of the constituency of the voters of the silver producing States. It is not a wise, explicit, manly declaration of national principles and policies; it is a mere political, evasive one.

Such the wide difference of views among the organs of the party, respecting an important deliverance of the Republican convention, is not an auspicious opening of its campaign.

STRANGE SEA ANIMAL.

Curious Specimen Found by the Crew of the Newark Coal.

One of the most developed specimens of the devil fish ever seen in this country is now on exhibition at the Manhattan Beach aquarium. The monster was fully fished and all united under the name of Diamphoteuthis. It is a curious looking thing, having eight, viewed from a pier-head, pouches in its body sheath, and rolling gently in the water. Its head is about the size and shape of a man's head, and on each side of the medium glow in phosphorescent light. Hydatinia sentinella, the fish has independent and free locomotion. It prefers to settle more permanently in the bottom of the ocean, and lies there on his shoals. It is common on the coasts of England and Norway. The monster has the advantage of feeling. Its feeling organs are so delicate that at least seems the object. There may be some reason for attaching Dicotomous to the whole of this sentient crab, but as yet they have not been discovered. The part held in common by the different members of the species is a skin closely fitting to the shell and consisting of a layer of the cells of the body of which the polyp-like tubes consist. The feeling membrane is fatten themselves in this structure with their thread-like protuberances, and thus enable the animal to live and grow. The feelers of the monster are supported by fibers of length and strongly-developed tentacles, mouth and organs of digestion. These are the sources of the feelers and supply the necessary food for the individuals having so mouth. The latter are for all females and have, in place of the tentacles, a girdle or nettle-like hooks and at a little distance from the girdle a circle of pale capsules containing egg. The hair-like hares coming from the eggs is the founder of a new colony.

FOUCAULT'S PENDULUM.

How to Demonstrate to the Eye a Simple Manner a Scientific Principle.

At dessert one can easily repeat, with the aid of an apple or orange, the experiment of the pendulum of Foucault, made under the dome of the Pantheon at Paris in 1851.

Pierce the apple with a match or toothpick; the two ends should come out exactly opposite each other. Attach to one of these ends a thread; this makes the pendulum. Tie the other end of the thread to a pin stuck firmly into a cork.

Support the cork by sticking obliquely into its sides three forks, the handles of which are rested upon the edge of a plate.

Oscillate the pendulum, after having regulated the length of the thread so that the lower point of the match almost reaches to the bottom of the plate. It will trace a circle with little mounds of sugar that are used to represent the circle of sand that Foucault had placed on the pavement under his pendulum.

The plate represents the earth. As soon as the plate remains stationary the match, at each oscillation of the apple, seems exactly in the direction that it has traced in the two heaps of sugar.

To represent the movement of the rotation of the earth, turn the plate carefully, without jarring, the forks and cork, of course, turning with the plate. It will be seen that the bearing of the plate does not influence in the least the direction of the pendulum, which continues to oscillate in the same plane as before, the match tracing a furrow distinct from the preceding one.

Thus can be demonstrated in a simple and practical manner the principle of the invariability of the plane of oscillation of the pendulum, the principle on which was based the celebrated experiment of the learned French savant.

EYE MEASUREMENTS.

An Almost Indispensable Requisite in a Good Mechanic.

A good mechanical eye is an almost essential requisite in a good mechanic, says the Manufacturer Gazette. Not one man ever attain distinction as a mechanic unless he is able to detect ordinary inaccuracies by sight, so that he can see if things are out of plumb, out of level, out of square, out of proper shape, and unless he can also detect the proportioned or ill-shaped patterns. This is a great professional attainment, and one which can be readily attained by an ordinary person. Of course there are defective eyes, as there are other defective organs; the speech, for instance, is sometimes defective, but the eye is susceptible of as much training as any organ. The muscles, the voice, the sense of hearing, all require training. Gaudier how the artist must train the organ of sight in order to detect the slightest imperfection in shade, color, proportion, shape, expression, etc. Not one blacksmith in five ever attains the art of hammering square, yet it is very essential in his occupation. It is simply because he allows himself to get into careless habits. A little training and care is all that is necessary for success.

—The committee in charge of the second annual Christian Endeavor excursion, at a meeting held Friday night, decided to make the trip up the Hudson on Wednesday, August 10. A new three-deck iron steamer has been secured for the occasion.

—A generous merchant of West Front street who is a great admirer of Sergeant Lynch of the Force, has sent that officer a magnificent razor. It is of pure imported high-tariff tin with real copper rivets. This he will carry in his hatband with the gift and says: "I'll use it everyday if it makes a dude of me!"

—Landlord Bright, of the Woodport House, at the upper end of Lake Hopatcong, has been entertaining as high as sixty guests at a time since the fishing season opened, and all have expressed great sport in the abundance of small bass and perch. The catch of small mouth bass has thus far been small.—Iron Era.

—The members of the Crescent League are not to be treated as boys any longer. They are not to have the use of their club-house locked in their faces on Sundays hereafter but will have the privilege of occupying their own property every day of the week the same as the Country Club, the Bicycle club and all other clubs.

—At a meeting of the Crescent League wheelmen, held Tuesday evening, it was decided to hold a 25-mile handicap road race in this vicinity open to all members of organized clubs or the L. A. W. —Complaints are made that men and boys are the habit of fishing on Sundays in the ponds about Washingtonville, who use profane language and drink whiskey and that people are passing by on their way to church. The State laws impose a fine of twenty-five dollars on any person arrested and convicted of fishing or shooting on Sunday, and disabling citizens threaten to prosecute those offenders if the practice is not discontinued.

—A horse owned by Alexander Gordon caused considerable excitement near Hopechapel, Sunday afternoon. First the animal was balky and then he ran into a ditch. One of the shafts was broken. After the horse was released from the wagon, the owner began whipping him. Then the animal ran away again, dragging Gordon a considerable distance. The horse after breaking loose was captured in front of the Potter Press works by Charles Burton.

—The "Stand" Gun club held their annual shooting tournament on Dan Terry's farm, near Dog Tavern, Monday. Two teams of nine men each were selected who shot at twenty blue rocks each, the team captained by Case being victorious. Refreshments were served on the grounds beneath cool shade trees, and the crowd spent a very pleasant day. One feature of the day was the breaking of 28 out of 30 blue rocks by Capt. Case. Some of the "Stand" boys were successful in breaking 18 out of twenty.

—Bound Brook is the loser of a grand improvement by recent action of the Somerset Court. It was the intention of the American High Speed Engine company to open and grade a fine avenue across the flats where there was once a pond, opposite the Yellow Tavern, if the company would donate the ground for the parkway. The courts have just decided that it does not belong to the county but to the borough of Bound Brook by virtue of their charter. This deprives all of their doing for certain reasons, and therefore the road will not be constructed.

The Invisible Independents.

Splendid weather favored the fifth contest of the New Jersey Independents' league, which was held Saturday on the South Side Gun club grounds in Newark. The Independents of Plainfield won the trophy for the fourth time by breaking 109 bluerocks out of a possible 125. Score:

Independent Gun club of Plainfield—Brant-ingham, 20; Mingle, 23; Squires, 24; Soper, 22; Hart, 20. Total, 109.

South Side Gun club of Newark—Brettnell, 22; Hudson, 21; Phillips, 18; Bauer, 20; Lindsley, 21. Total, 102.

New Brunswick Gun club—R. Pettit, 22; J. Bowden, 20; J. Palmer, 16; J. Irons, 14, and C. S. Vandine, 17. Total, 89.

Maplewood Gun club—C. Dunn, 20; W. Smith, 22; Case, 18; Richley, 20, and J. L. Smith, 22. Total, 102.

Bolting Springs Pointing and Gun club—Gardner, 20; Atwood, 20; Ayers, 22, and Meyer, 22. Total, 85.

Essex Rod and Gun club of Newark—Bauer, 20; Kruger, 19; Schmidt, 20; Tonne, 16, and Hensinger, 15. Total, 90.

Enal Gun club—Balthaus, 15; Dukes, 16; S. S. Redden, 16; A. Wheaton, 16, and G. Bowers, 12. Total, 80.

Wooden Spoon club of Newark—Geoffroy, 20; Stelzer, 20; Vanslyke, 20; Cockefair, 20, and Wallace, 20. Total, 100.

It was not anticipated that the Independents would win in Saturday's contest, as the strongest clubs did not participate. The "colts", however, went to the traps and smashed target after target in great shape. The next contest will take place on the grounds of the Independents in this city some time next month, or possibly the latter part of this.

Williams of this city.

NO SUNDAY CLOSING IN FANWOOD.

An Indignant Townsman Protests Against Liquor Selling on the Sabbath, and Blames a Well-intentioned Committeeman Who Has Gone to Sea.

To the Editor of THE PRESS:—On my way Sunday morning when the church bells are ringing in the town of Fanwood, there can be seen a motley crowd of old and young, both male and female, all wending towards those places of worship wherein they can bow before the shrine of Bacchus and partake of draughts to quench the thirst that was created by the debauch of the previous night. And as the day progresses there can be seen the same participants wending their way toward their places of abode. Many of them lay down by the wayside to rest.

Among the number of people on a Sunday afternoon not long ago, could be seen two brawny sons of Erin holding on to a fence and discussing the advantages of a saloon in the town. Says one of them to his friend, "Begorra, Pat, and who should we give the credit to for the we drop that we had in that house ?" "Why, Mike, don't you know, that I was a paper stuck to the wall in that house that said something about liquors and things that had the name of a Kite to it. Anybody that takes a Kite we will have to give the credit to. Three cheers for the Kite, and may it fly high and drop down our way that we will not need to walk so far on Sunday morning for a we drop." These remarks show plainly that the signer of the licenses that permits Sunday traffic, is held in high estimation by those who visit those places on Sundays.

Such are the results of the power of granting licenses vested in the town committee, for a town of law-abiding inhabitants. Appeals and protest avail naught before the committee, for they have their mind fully made up to grant all applications that come before them. Strangers ask why are they so liberal in granting licenses to all comers ? That question can be answered only by saying that their interest lies in depending upon their subservance to these great men who control the political destinies of the town. The last-mentioned is which Sunday is observed in the town cannot be attributed to any other reason. In the hands of the voters lays the power to remove this blighting shame from the name of the town, that their wives and daughters may pass through the streets of the place without being insulted by blear-eyed inebriated specimens from other places where the laws are enforced and respected on the Sabbath day.

A PROPOS.

Fanwood, June 13.

—Wednesday morning of next week is the morning of song at the high-school. Friends are invited.

CLARKE vs. MATTHEWS.

An Answer Issued Refers to the Minneapolis Convention.

The only paper in Plainfield with a correspondent on the ground to send a special representative to the National Republican convention at Minneapolis, was, of course, THE PRESS. In this it merely outlined what it had already accomplished for the benefit of its readers, and for the purpose of giving the people the news at any cost, and added further proof of its right to the title given it years ago of "Plainfield's only newspaper."

The Minneapolis despatches published each day in THE PRESS from its representative at the convention, Walter Irving Clarke, are to-day evidence of his foresight and the intimate association and confidence to which he was admitted by both New Jersey leaders in the battle at General Sewell and Mayor Gilbert.

The day the convention opened THE PRESS despatches were headed and that same heading was again used yesterday even before the vote had been given. Through Tuesday's issue, Thursday's and Friday's issues THE PRESS representative prophesied the nomination of the president, and told why.

All of this caused the Republican organ of the city fits and spasms. They were not giving their few readers any information upon the only subject of interest to them, and their few readers were turning to THE PRESS for news of the convention and Mayor Gilbert's position in it. So they resorted to the ostrich philosophy, and probably fell back on the very proper defence that such news should not be expected of a truly local paper.

But the Courier raked up something by the name of "Matthews" and persuaded it to send the paper daily despatches from the spot. Well! Just get a file and look back at those despatches! Wednesday it was, "McKinley may lead the ticket". Thursday, "Acknowledgement on the part of the Harrison men that the nomination the President is well nigh impossible"; and Friday—Friday, mind you —after THE PRESS bulletin had announced Harrison's renomination, and THE PRESS extra with the fact and the candidate's picture was selling on the streets, the Courier ran out a half-sheet, called it an extra, and vainly offered it for one cent with the news of the result in one column and this important despatch from Minneapolis in another column:

It is not likely that either the President or his ex-Secretary of State will be nominated.

MATTHEWS.

Yet such people intrude themselves among newspaper men.

SUDDEN DEATH OF M. M. THORN.

He Expires at the Home of His Only Daughter, in California.

The following despatch reached THE PRESS office by wire Wednesday night:

SANTA BARBARA, Cal., June 8.

Died June 7, Martin M. Thorn, aged 68 years.

Martin M. Thorn was born in Lenawee county, near Adrian, Michigan, in May, 1818. He came to Plainfield in 1850 and married Sarah W. Vail, daughter of Stephen Vail, deceased, and they returned to Michigan where they lived until 1862, when they moved to Plainfield. Here he has spent almost the entire remainder of his life. Shortly after coming to Plainfield in 1852 he engaged in the commission business in the wholesale part of Washington Market, New York, and continued in this business till 1867. About 1870 he commenced the real estate business in this city and afterwards added fire insurance. In this business he continued until April last, when it was disposed of.

In April 1867 he lost his wife and from that time seemed to be gradually failing. He leaves an only child, a daughter, Ella M. Thorn, with whom he was living at Santa Barbara, and an only sister, Mrs. Thomas, now residing in Ohio. In the fall of 1889 Mr. Thorn went to Santa Barbara and spent the winter, hoping to recover his health. In March 1890, he returned to his business on North avenue, which had been cared for in his absence by his brother-in-law, M. F. Marsley. A change of climate proved rather detrimental to his health and in the fall he again returned to Santa Barbara, leaving the business in charge of Mr. Marsley. But at this time the change of air and scene and all other efforts were unavailing. He gradually grew worse and died as announced above at his home with his daughter in Santa Barbara.

Dent "Fly off the Handle".

To run a newspaper without occasionally publishing an item that is untrue, or gives offence, is like running a railroad without having smash-ups and accidents. It can't be done, truthfully remarks an exchange. No man in the world is so likely to be imposed upon as the editor of a newspaper. Scarcely a week goes constantly—day and night—he must rely in a great measure upon second or third parties for information as to the events that transpire during that week. Frequently statements are received from good, reliable people, but which are subsequently discovered, after having gone through many mouths, to be without foundation in fact. If, therefore, kind reader, you find yourself aggrieved by a statement in your home paper, keep this in mind. Don't "fly off the handle", but go to the editor and ask for a correction, and take THE PRESS'S word for it, in nine cases out of ten, if your cause is just, you will be received like a gentleman and the correction made with pleasure.

The Father Wants His Boy but Would n't Kidnap Him.

John B. Gable, whose wife as told in THE PRESS last week, accuses him of kidnapping their boy who is her only means of support since John deserted her, brought the runaway lad back Monday with his hair cut and dressed in a new suit of clothes.

Gable told a PRESS reporter that whenever his wife threatens to give up any of the children he would like to have them, and hopes that when she gets the divorce she is after and marries the man who is "keeping company" with her, she'll let him (Gable) have the boy. But he would n't take him from her, and when the boy left home of his own accord last week and traveled to New York and found his father at the shop where he works on South Fifth avenue, Gable took him at once to the barber's, the undertaker's and the clothier's and fixed him up and then brought him back to the mother himself.

A Good Deed.

This time of year reminds one of the necessity of some place to bathe. The various streams in the vicinity are not adapted for such purposes, and besides the authorities are not willing that a man should enjoy this luxury. What is wanted is a public bath. In cities not so large as Plainfield they are provided with such convenience and comfort. Most anyone would be willing to pay a reasonable fee for the privilege of taking a swim these warm days. Now that the city is supplied with water, there seems to be no reason why it should not have an institution of this kind.

Street Peace Needed.

Unless something very dreadful occurs there will be a great crop of peaches from Morris, Somerset, Hunterdon and Warren counties this year. Everything looks promising now, and the delicious fruit should be plentiful enough to be within reach of everybody.

—It is said that when the trucks of the street railway reach Somerset street, the grade will have to be put down nearly four inches.

THE WEDDING OF MR. EVANS.

A Son of the Late Ex-Mayor of Plainfield Marries His Valley of Willow-Banks, and They Sail for Europe.

From THE PRESS of June 9.

When the steamer City of Berlin left the dock yesterday for Europe, it carried a happy party of former Plainfielders. There was Mrs. Eliza Evans, widow of Ex-Mayor John H. Evans, and her son, Mr. John, her niece, Mrs. and Mrs. Cortlandt de Lacey Evans and their daughter Miss Meive, and Mr. and Mrs. Clark Wright Evans. Mrs. Cortlandt de Lacey Evans is a son of Samuel H. Milliken of Central avenue, and Mrs. Clark Evans was a Miss Wells of Willow-Barn. The latter is a bride of one week. Her marriage and that of the elder Mrs. Evans, were literally filled with elegant floral offerings. As the steamer passed Sandy Hook pilot boat No. 1 were fired from the grounds of Daniel F. Lewis, president of the Brooklyn city railroads, and Mrs. John Evans's brother.

The wedding of Mrs. W. Evans took place at noon, Thursday of last week, in the First M. E. church of Wilkes-Barre, and was one of the prettiest the society people of that place had ever witnessed. The bride was Marion Edith, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles D. Wells of that city.

The church was well-filled with friends and acquaintances of the bride. The altar was prettily trimmed with a dark green background of palms and smilax, and white roses on the railing. Taller palms raised their graceful branches on either side of the pulpit platform. It was not for some time after the appointed hour when organist Karl Schmidt began the Lohengrin wedding march, the middle doors swung open and all eyes were turned upon the entrance of the bridal party. There came first two of the ushers, E. N. Carpenter, of Wilkes-Barre, and Frank N. Brastow, and they were followed by the bridesmaids, Miss Grace Derr, of Wilkes-Barre, and Miss Susie Jermyn, of Scranton. They were exquisitely pretty costumes of pink mousseline de soie, gloves and slippers to match, and Leghorn hats trimmed with pink sweet peas. They carried huge bouquets of Marie La Franz roses.

The little maid of honor was Melva Valentine Evans, niece of the groom. She was a picture of loveliness. Her prettily fashioned hat fell over her shoulders. Her little Empire gown of white dotted Swiss just touched the floor as she walked, and in her arms she carried, tightly clasped, a beautiful bouquet of white and pink roses. They drooped from her arms or nodded languidly as she held them, and nestled coyly against her sweet face. The bride walked alone also, and wore a most becoming costume of ivory satin, on train, with tulle veil. A sun burst, of diamond crescent and diamond stars completed the ensemble. The bride's gown was thickly studded with diamonds which she wore at the front of the corsage was the gift of the groom. She carried lilies of the valley and white beautiful in figure and feature, her friends thought that, in spite of her slight pallor, that she had never look more lovely.

The other ushers, O. Hilliard Bell, of Wilkes-Barre, and Edward A. U. Valentine, of Baltimore, and last of all the ushers were black cutaways, gray trousers and white waistcoats, white cravats, caught with exquisite little pearl horseshoe pins, the gift of the groom, and white gloves. The bridal party was met at the altar rail by the groom and his brother, Cortlandt de Lacey Evans. The latter Dr. Boyle spoke the words which united the two. The ceremony was what is known as the longer marriage ritual of the Methodist Episcopal church, while long, was quite very distinct. At the close prayer was offered by the Rev. Dr. E. F. Ketcham, of this city. The guests from the church went to the Mansion house wedding march. The vicinity of the church was a scene of unwonted activity from the rolling carriages and cabs.

A reception followed at the house at which only the relatives and intimate friends were present. Delicious music came from an orchestra entirely concealed by palms. Many gifts received congratulations as they stood in the east corner of the parlor. A basking of green ferns and white flowers was placed behind them. The expressions of good will were the heartiest. A wedding dinner was served. The bride and groom left on the afternoon train for New York from whence they sailed yesterday for a five-months' European tour.

THE MALE WILL CASE ENDED.

Chancellor McGill Agrees to Make Each of the Dozen Lawyers an Allowance Out of the Estate, and Whatever is Left Will Go to the Heirs—The Court Asked to Appoint New Administrators.

The final step in the matter of the alleged will of Job Male, Plainfield's wealthy ex-mayor, who died before he could sign the will, was taken before chancellor McGill in his chambers in Jersey City Monday afternoon. The chancellor had decided that the manuscript will which was offered for probate was not a will, and he had fixed Monday as the day for signing the decree. The heirs who reside in various parts of the country and Canada were represented by seven lawyers.

Ex-Governor Beelle, and Craig A. Marsh of this city, represented the proponents of the will. Beelle argued the matter before the court at length, showing how he and Mr. Marsh had considered it their duty to endeavor to establish the will, the amount of labor they had performed in the matter and how they were entitled to an allowance out of the estate which was invoiced at $200,000 real and $10,000 personal estate. He was followed by ex-chancellor Runyon and R. V. Lindabury, of Elizabeth, who each detailed the amount of work they had done in the case and declared that they also were entitled to an allowance out of the estate. Then Foster M. Voorhees of Elizabeth, C. A. Reed and W. E. Sullivan of this city, each lightened the chancellor as to the amount of labor they had performed in bringing about the declaration of the court that the will offered for probate was no will and presented their views as to the propriety of making each of them an allowance.

The chancellor listened patiently to all of the gentlemen, and after ascertaining from each that they had made no arrangements with their clients to be paid by the estate and that unless they were paid out of the estate they would not be paid at all, he intimated that he would make such an allowance as he considered to be commensurate with the estate which they represented.

Ex-Governor Beelle said that there would be no appeal from the chancellor's decree and presented a petition praying that the administrators pendente lite, John W. Harrison, of Jersey City, and Miss Pope, of this city, be continued in charge of the estate. Mr. Lindabury and ex-chancellor Runyon objected to this and presented another petition praying the court to appoint other administrators. The chancellor fixed June 14, as a day for considering the petitions.

New Tennis Club Officers.

The Arlington Lawn Tennis club which met at the home of Miss Lizzie Livesay, Thursday evening, elected the following officers for the ensuing year:

President—Miss Lizzie Livesay.
Vice President—Miss Mabel Bunting.
Secretary and Treasurer—Miss Ella Bunting.
Executive Committee—Miss Clara Goodwin.

After the business meeting, dancing was indulged in and refreshments served.

—Eight infant children were baptized by pastor Hoffman at St. Trinity Reformed church Sunday morning.

LOW LODGES HIS FRANCHISES.

The Supreme Court Reviews Them Illegal in Unlawful Fashion.

Two sums of money belonging to Plainfield were deposited temporarily in the Second National bank of Trenton. They are those brought by Mason W. Tyler, Rowland Cox and others to set aside the ordinance granting franchises which was granted to J. M. Low by the common council of 1891, Messrs. Tyler, Cox and their associates were successful in both cases.

The water franchise is declared invalid upon the ground pointed out at the time by the corporation counsel and by Chancellor McGill, viz: that the names of those who were to be associated with Low in the corporation were not given. The ordinance provided that Mr. Low had to give the names, but he declined to do so, and thereupon the common council ignored the advice of the corporation counsel and passed the franchise over Chancellor McGill's veto. The "ex officio" unnamed associates. This the Supreme Court decision could not legally do done. The franchise could no more be granted to J. M. Low and six unknown associates than it could be to seven unknown persons or to any seven persons whose names he might choose to designate. For this reason all of the proceedings are set aside with costs.

The other case could have been put up on the same ground, but as there was another point which was more palpable which the court stated as the ground of its decision. The original act to enable private corporations to be formed for supplying cities with a system of sewerage, was amended to suit the exigencies of the case and without consulting the corporation counsel or anyone else. The title attached to the amendment he declared it unconstitutional for several reasons, among others, that it was special legislation. Mr. Low's Jersey City counsel were of a different opinion and proceeded to act under the amendment. The court declares that the amendment is unconstitutional as being special legislation.

The prosecutors were represented by Gen. T. Lindabury and Mr. Low by Mr. Thompson of John R. Emery. The common council of 1892 passed resolutions declaring that in their opinion the ordinances were illegal and directing the corporation counsel to prepare ordinances to repeal them and further to bring suit to set them aside if Mr. Low should succeed in the Tyler case. The repealing ordinances were passed, and Mr. Low at once brought suit to have them declared invalid. That litigation is still pending, but it is believed will now be dropped as there is nothing left for Mr. Low to fight over unless he takes the Tyler case to the court of errors and appeals.

Mayor Gilbert says the Low ordinances which the supreme court has just declared void, and when they were passed over his veto, he refused, under advice of counsel, to be connected in any out their provisions. His position is now fully sustained by the supreme court.

THE CENSOR GOSSIPS AGAIN.

He Talks of Local "Culture" and a Railroad Crank, and Tells a Funny Story.

A Plainfield girl showed me one evening lately an invitation she had received not long before to be present at an afternoon reception at one of our so-called literary societies of women. The exact name of the particular organization escapes my memory at the moment. It was a big name with ornithological predilections. The polite note brought my young friend to enjoy with the club a "literary" (?) afternoon. I despised it, and let them. It was in black and white in the cultured member's own hand-writing, "Literary"; with two t's! And this was from a woman who has influence in fashioning many of the discourses about ethics of realism, and protoplasms of idealism, and chrysalides of fiction, and slow-burning conscientiousness of criticism, and a scientific confusion of such like harmless rot and nonsense, with a deferential, fearful humility that would make a dog drink a poor, ignorant man who would spell literary correctly.

This, of course, is only one of the multitudinous ways in which the feminine culture in our all-god literary female strains. It's tough to think of it, isn't it?

Not a thousand miles from East Fifth street there lives a very small boy who can give points to some of his elders in certain matters. I don't know just how old he is, but when I say that he still wears short skirts and curly ringlets. One night last week the family were all seated on the front porch and the young man, suffered to sit up much later than usual, fell into that pensive mood which often comes to children when they strive to settle once and for all the great mysteries of life and eternity.

There had been silence in the group for several minutes. The loud mother supposed the little one in her lap was away off in dreamland but that was where she was mistaken. He was very much the contrary.

"Mamma," said he, "when I die will I go to Heaven, an' be an angel ?"

"I hope so, my dear", was the smiling reply.

"An' will I have wings an' fly aloun' in the garden ?"

"I suppose you will."

"Well, Mamma," he said, confidentially, "then if anybody tells me to put salt on my tail an' ketch one, will you hit 'em wif a brick ?"

And mamma thought it was getting late for that little boy to be up and he was led away to bed.

There is a Bowery song with a refrain about the "funny things we see when we have n't got a gun" and I always think of it when I happen to take a certain train to or from the city and am treated to some of the funny things. One of them is a tall, lean man who looks as if he had just dropped out of an illustrated Dudleys or Dickens, whose always appears, no matter what he wears, as if he were attired in a bathing-suit. He carries a tennis-racket and is very nearly if not summer and dress-suit rass all winter. He rides, as we all do, cheaper know, in one of our lovely, exclusive, high-tariff club cars and I wonder how in whose his oddest freak comes in.

About once a week he brings to the train a lady of his own age and an extremely pretty girl, who, I think, is related to be his wife and daughter. With these he enters the car immediately preceding the "exclusive" and, leaving them there, goes to smoke into the club car. Where he remains until Jersey City is reached. Then, emerging, he rejoins his charges and condescends to cross the ferry with them in the same car with myself and the lady and the pretty girl into the club car once in a while—especially the pretty girl !

THE CENSOR.

Statistics Gathered by the Gatherers.

On the green of the Dunellen bowlers, Thursday afternoon were gathered a score of good fellows from this city, New York, Newark and Fanwood. Two rinks were chosen by Capt. Wood, Ellis and Charles Schoppis as skips. The sides selected included under Mr. Elliott's leadership, John Young, William Adams, George Woodruff and Dr. Bogert; under Schoppis, Mr. Schoppis, Frank Hoffner, Thomas Hay Smith, Andrew Love and Tom Hale. The game was a close one, Elliott's rink winning out with a total of 9 to Mr. Schoppis' credit against 3 for Mr. Schoppis. All the boys then adjourned to the hitherto prosaic hotel in Mr. Schoppis' home they were right royally entertained.

WAS PRESIDENT SIMON WRONG ?

He Let Commissioner Roach Whip Carey's Spotless Bill Through the Council.

To THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—How can the action of chairman Gilma of the council be justified in passing without the knowledge of a majority of the committee, Carey's bogus $500 claim. It was run through under conditions which is what is spite of the fact that the charter of the city, in section 7, expressly says: "No by-law shall be at any time altered, unless the same shall have been introduced and passed at two common council at a previous meeting."

Councilman Frazee's motion to vote on the Carey bill separate from the others, was perfectly just, and in the interests of saving the people's money, and deserved the support of the council. Only one member of the auditing committee signed the claim, and its passage under councilman Marsh's orders was an outrage.

TAX PAYER.

THE BEST OF BENEFIT ORDERS.

What the Royal Arcanum Has Done in the Case of Its Deceased Plainfield Members. Speaks for Itself.

Undoubtedly the best managed beneficent order in the country is the Royal Arcanum. It furnishes a benefit of $3,000 to the widows and orphans of a deceased member, and pays it promptly. The latter fact has been demonstrated in Plainfield Council No. 711, where two members have died during the ten years of its existence here, the rapidity with which necessary days were taken in these cases to pay the benefit to the family deserves to be noted.

The first death was that of J. Newton Jenkins, who entered the order April 9, 1880, and paid assessments (up to his death) to the amount of $70.20.

Date of death—March 18, 1882.
Proofs of death completed—March 20, 1882.
Proofs forwarded—March 20, 1882.
Death received—April 1, 1882.
Time elapsed from death to receipt of draft —13 days.
Time between death and payment—22 days.

The other death was that of Hon. Hezekiah D. Garretson, who joined the order February 26, 1883, and paid assessments during the nine years of his membership amounting to $200 26. Extra time was necessary in his case to complete the proofs of death, as the burial was in the northern part of New York State.

Date of death—March 24, 1892.
Proofs of death (complete)—April 11, 1892.
Proofs forwarded—April 11, 1892.
Death received—April 21, 1892.
Time elapsed from death to receipt of draft —28 days.
Time between death and payment—37 days.

The number attending private schools —boys, 197; girls, 204. Attending public school—boys, 126; girls, 99. Number of children not vaccinated—boys, 131; girls, 121. It will be noticed in the table above that the largest number of school children is between the ages of five and six, and the smallest number between seventeen and eighteen.

A PRINCE'S ESCAPADES.

Rosalie Bonaparte the Lawful Wife of Louis Clovis.

Bad Blood Asserts Itself—The Mushroom Aristocrat in Search of Pedigree—Prison Ay—An Abandoned Confederate Hall.

According to recent advices from London Mme. Rosalie Clovis Bonaparte has established her right to be called the lawful wife of the scapegrace Prince Louis Clovis Bonaparte, the eldest son of the late Prince Louis Lucien Bonaparte, who was acknowledged by his father a short time before the latter's death. Mme. Bonaparte recently prosecuted her husband, the prince, and one William Alexander Thomson, a solicitor, on a charge of having attempted to defraud her out of jewelry valued at $100,000. Mme. Bonaparte was originally a Miss Rosalie Barlow. She is a pretty woman with brownish hair done up in a bunch behind under a tilted hat. There is little enough of the Napoleonic in the appearance of her husband. He is above the average height, with an ugly head and a very big black mustache. The lady's story is that Bonaparte and Thomson conspired to her ruin by prosecution for obtaining money by false pretenses had been commenced against Bonaparte and that he would be imprisoned. On these representations and to save him from that position in which she believed him to be the parted with the jewelry he had given her. It was family jewelry given to him by his mother.

LOUIS CLOVIS BONAPARTE.

Accordingly on September 27, very soon after he had got possession of his wife's jewelry, Prince Clovis left her and she did not see him again until she had him arrested. Subsequently she discovered that her husband went through a ceremony of marriage on October 12 with Laura Elizabeth Scott at Red Hill. She further alleged that the prosecution story of her husband and Mr. Thomson was false, and that the jewelry had been given to Laura Elizabeth Scott. Prince Clovis was indicted, Thomson also being indicted with him, but they were permitted to go free on returning the jewelry. In the course of the proceedings, however, Thomson had asserted that Mme. Bonaparte's real name was Eugene, and that she was married to a person of that name at the time she married Bonaparte and had never been legally separated, and that therefore Bonaparte could not be held answerable for her debts.

Mme. Bonaparte brought suit against Thomson for damages for making these statements. The case has been settled by consent, the defendant having stated that Mme. Bonaparte was the lawful wife of Prince Clovis and paying the damages. The plaintiff's version is a predicament, as, if Thomson's solicitation is true, the prince has committed bigamy in marrying Miss Scott. The latter belongs to a respectable family and was, it is said, induced to marry the prince through the glamor of his title, to which he had a right to bear after his acknowledgment of service to his father. Prince Louis Lucien, whereas Mme. Rosalie had married him when he was of no distinction, and that the jewelry under the stigma of illegitimacy. The marriage of Bonaparte and Miss Scott was announced in an illustrated paper, which gave a description of the jewelry given to the bride, this being Mme. Rosalie's jewelry. It is reported that Mme. Rosalie Bonaparte will probably follow up her vindication in a similar suit by criminal proceedings against her faithless husband.

Improved Punishment.

It is said that in a number of penitentiaries a 3-foot section of rubber hose is used for the purpose of inflicting corporal punishment on recalcitrant prisoners. Humanely speaking, the idea is an improvement on the old cat-o'-nine-tails and other instruments of correction, says a correspondent of the St. Louis Globe-Democrat. A few years ago the principal of one of the schools in this city, who had been complained of for cruelty in flogging his pupils, experimented with a 3-foot piece of hose, and discovered, much to his satisfaction, that he could subject the most unruly and lusty howls from his charges without leaving a single perceptible mark on their skins. In fact, rubber hose is awfully but leaves no trace, and this circumstance has no doubt led to its employment in penitentiaries as well as schools.

A Mystery Solving.

The great sidewalk in the City of Mexico is the largest in America and most nearly $2,000,000. Its foundation was laid by the Spaniards in 1573 on the site of an old Aztec pyramid and the building was finished in 1667. Against its western wall leans the celebrated "Calendar Stone," covered with hieroglyphics and weighing twenty-five tons. A cast of this remarkable work of antiquity was exhibited at the New Orleans exposition of 1884-'85.

A Rapid Grower.

A single specimen of an Asiatic pemperion planted on Trevey grounds, Berlin, propagated a vine as large as a man's body, which in one season grew to a total length of nearly 300 feet and ripened more than 800,000 seeds.

PRESIDENT OF CORNELL.

Prof. Schurman, Though Young, Is Eminently Qualified for His Position.

Prof. Jacob Gould Schurman, who has been elected to succeed Mr. Adams as president of Cornell university, has in an admirable degree the qualifications for president of a young and vigorous university itself. He is possessed of a large measure of what for lack of a better name is called magnetism. He is a man of striking appearance, an orator as well as a scholar of the first rank, a training in wide research and philosophical writer, and his executive ability has made the philosophical department at Cornell such that students with doctors' degrees from German universities come here to complete their studies and receive further instruction.

Prof. Schurman is but thirty-eight years old. He received his first schooling in the village school in his native place, Prestcove, Prince Edward Island, attending until nearly thirteen years of age, after which he spent two years at a home school. Though already prepared for college, he resolved to have an education. After a year's preparation he left the farm of 1870 and entered Charlottetown, with no help in a collegiate course, but by the generosity of the government scholarships. He spent another twelve months in the academy at that place, and won several more prizes in 1872. He entered Dalhousie college, Halifax, and the London university, which is worth going to Halifax to get a degree. On this occasion he graduated in the year 1878, and

A BRIGHT YOUNGSTER.

Germany's Prince Imperial Made a Lieutenant at Three Years.

The old customs of the house of Hohenzollern, of which the recent reception of the crown prince into the Prussian army was one, are observed as rigidly as were the laws of the Medes and Persians. The youngest Hohenzollern behaved splendidly; he hopped, skipped and jumped during his first march with regiment, the Grenadier guard, to keep pace with the big fellows, and at the state dinner the ten-year-old had the honor of sitting next to his aunt, the empress.

But those who saw the little crown prince of Germany during his visit last summer to England, and remember the pale, thin, sickly-looking boyish child, into whose very play there entered something of the nervousness consequent upon mental strain, will regret that the old custom of the heir to the German throne entering the ranks as his initial military step was not, in the sense, put aside. The crown prince of Germany, so his tutors say, is already thoroughly imbued with a sense of the responsibility of being the heir apparent of a great empire; he is quick, precocious, so to say—clothes and a few more years in the nursery would, from the physical point of view, be of immense benefit to the child; the excitement and strain of publicity, from which hypothetically he will escape for him, may do him very serious harm.

[Special Letter.]

"Visitors ashore, all! Come, now, look sharp, time's up!" cries the husky-voiced old quartermaster, as he calls about the crowded quarter deck of the big steamer, gesticulating and pointing to the smart little steam launch now alongside the gangway for the purpose of conveying all not seaward bound back to the Plymouth docks. Silent little groups here and there suddenly become animated, hands are pressed, lips meets lips in the usual fashion, with a chorus of good-byes—some cheery, some sorrowful—the throng of visitors are soon huddled together on the narrow deck of the little steam launch.

Now she is heard and the tug-boat's swain's pipe pierce the air, over the hows a rattling and rumbling of chains and wheels are heard and the anchors hang suspended from the cathead. From the depths, far down below, a plunging bells is faintly heard, a deep, throbbing pulsation, felt but not heard, causes the ship to tremble and shake. She is moving! Slowly she revolves, the water about the stern is subtly disturbed and agitated—and we are off.

The red hills of old England dissolve into clouds. Plymouth's stately spires look more and more like specter fingers pointing upward, grow shinier and shinier, and then are lost in the mist. The Needles, the mariner's unerring landmark to the English channel, loom up on our starboard quarter, soon grow less distinct and finally dissolve in the distance.

On the afternoon of the fourth day out "land ahead" is proclaimed by the man at the lookout, and presently we are able to discern what looks like mountains a huge column rising out of the water, but ever changing in outline as we near it. It, in a measure, is a chain of lofty cliffs and shadowy canyons. This is the picturesque island of Porto Santo, situated a few leagues to the north of the island of Madeira. As we steam close under its lee the rays of the setting sun, reflecting upon the basaltic cliffs a thousand feet above, gives them a rich golden hue. Sailing by Madeira rapidly as we do, Porto Santo is still plainly in view when Madeira is closely reached and the anchors drop with a splash into the tranquil waters of the sheltered roadstead of Funchal bay.

Nature has done much for Madeira, but man, little. Its picturesque hills and long-drawn valleys, many of them incomparable flora are all the free gifts of nature, but the blight of Portuguese government is painfully apparent throughout this fairy island. It has been overrun by the English, and beyond its natural attractions it has been enhanced, is now only famous for its wicker-work and fine linen, for its hammock-chairs and baggage. It is indeed the resting ground for the lame and the halt, the blind and the sick, the rich and those some to lingering consumption. To us it is a delightful haven of rest after the monotony of the sea. But it is not to be described among the

AN UNMARKED GRAVE.

No Headstone Indicates Lester Wallack's Resting Place.

"Rip" Pierpont's Tomb—Some of the Interesting Inscriptions Upon Monuments in Greenwood Cemetery.

"Where the dead people are, sweetie?" Your songs? Your fashion of merchant, that were wont to set the table in a roar?

These words of Hamlet came to me involuntarily as I stood beside the grave of Lester Wallack in Greenwood cemetery the other day.

There, under the green sward that surrounds the last gentle home of Nature's hand, reposed all that was mortal of one of the best light comedians that ever graced the boards of a theater in this city and one of the handsomest men of his day.

There it lay, Lester Wallack, the greatest favorite that New York ever knew as an actor, and a citizen to the last degree, without so much as a footstone to tell of his resting place; this merry, merry comedian, in whom there was required genius, beauty and gentlemanly bearing.

Was it not for the small-sized monument standing in the lot, which bears his father's name, Lester Wallack's grave would be as unknown to the passer-by as the pauper who sleeps in the potter's field.

Truly, "to this complexion must we come at last."

Lester in his time played many parts, but he never enjoyed after-life's fitful fever so much as such a part as this—the inmate of an unmarked grave.

It was not many months before he died that the comedian was the recipient of a benefit that netted him twenty thousand dollars, a fact remembered by those like has never been seen by the present generation.

Lester was not only his wellborn friend and fellow-player, Harry Montague. But the great, busy, bustling world that both have left behind, with their many odd traditions of the stage, has been much kinder to the younger and lesser actor, for a handsome monument marks the spot where he is resting in dreamless sleep.

Just above the grave of Henry Want Beecher, a trifle higher up on Ocean hill, facing the blue waters of Atlantic ocean, whose foam can be seen from the spot, lies the burial plot of the Wallacks. On this plot the following tablet tells us:

Three theaters have been known as "Wallack's"—the first on the west side of Broadway, just below Broome street; the second at Broadway and Thirteenth street; the third at Broadway and Thirtieth street. Now there is no "Wallack's" now. Even the name has disappeared, and the man who made all three theaters famous, with his genius sleeps in an almost unknown grave.

Surely no stronger commentary could be made on life—applause and fame on one hand; an unmarked grave on the other.

The burial plot is situated just back of Ocean avenue. It contains five graves. At the rear rises a monument of dark granite, four feet high. The form is a heavy, massive slab, with a projection at an incline of forty-five degrees. Upon the front of the latter are the words:

JAMES WILLIAM WALLACK,
Died
December 25, 1864,
Aged 68 years.

On the front of the monument are entered these words:

CHARLES SAVILLE WALLACK,
Died
August 11, 1866, aged 34.

James W. Wallack was a handsome man, even when he had almost reached the appointed three-score and ten. He was an Englishman who came to this country in 1818. He remained for 7 of that year he made his first appearance, at the old Park theater, which was situated on Park row. In the New York audiences, and for forty years he was a prominent figure in theatrical affairs in this city. He was at one time master of the National theater, at Church and Leonard streets. This was in 1837.

In 1852 he became lessee of Brougham's Lyceum, which he renamed Wallack's Lyceum. His last appearance was the character of Mathias in "The Veteran," a drama written by Lester Wallack and which was produced at that theater on January 17, 1858. It ran until May 14, when Mr. Wallack bade farewell to the stage. Previous to the production of "The Veteran" he had appeared for thirty-three nights as Shylock, that memorable, sixty-eighth, an unprecedented event. And Mr. Wallack was then sixty-four years old.

His death was a terrible blow to his favorite child, John Lester Wallack. Almost the last time I saw the latter Lester spoke of the coming Christmas and how he dreaded it, for it brought back sad memories, and whose words "tears in his voice" as he spoke.

If the elder Wallack was unknown to the general throng, his son John Lester was not. His personation of the part in "Rosedale" was one of the great attractions of the day.

And he sleeps in an unnamed grave so far as any except his family knows.

Harry Montague, the friend of Wallack Manis, was also a handsome man. Women raved about him and men admired him, for he was a fine specimen. He sleeps to-day in a grave in the Wallack plot beside the Wallacks. The spot is surrounded by a handsome iron fence of light-colored granite in the shape of a diamond, on the top of which is cut these words:

wit in the true sense of the word. His humor was natural, as all the written plays ever written. Born in the Green Isle, he was naturally lively and companionable. He liked amusement many times, but his efforts always resulted in failure. At one time he was manager of the old Bowery theater, after he had failed with Broughton's Lyceum.

His legacy in career in this country at the Park theater on October 4, 1842, in O'Callaghan in "His Last Legs," and he died a short period before his death. Time dealt lightly with him, and his laugh was as hearty and his merriment as contagious at sixty-five as it was when he first greeted the New York public.

Close by, not a hundred feet away, sleeps Charles M. Walcot, the best Rolf Acres that this stage has ever known. Only witness his performance in this character, with Broughton as Sir Lucius O'Trigger, in the case of which Mr. Abeckle, was a treat that New Yorkers of a third of a century ago enjoyed and remember. His grandchildren, white marble slab characteristic of his retiring nature—with this inscription:

CHARLES SEELTON WALCOT,
Born December 25, 1804.
Died May 18, 1865.

On the top of the stone is a small marble book, on the leaves of which this sentence is engraved:

Another prime favorite at the same theater was the handsome Laura Keene, whose various ways were prototypes of those of the Bernhardts; in fact, the same restless, tireless energy was as native to the dead actress as it is to the living.

Her resting place on Dale's avenue is within sight of John Brougham's monument. The plot is inclosed with an arbor vitæ fence and the monument is of granite, a lamb, on which stands a cross. Only this simple sentence is to be read:

LAURA KEENE,
Died November 4, 1873.

street, where she produced "Our American Cousin," with Joseph Jefferson, E. A. Sothern and Edward Kinchen acting in the cast. Shealoo produced the celebrated "Seven Sisters."

Miss Keene's mother is buried in the same plot.

Another actor, and one better known to the present generation of theater-goers than any of the others, who is also buried in Greenwood, is William J. Florence. His monument is the most pretentious, with one exception, of that of any actor in the cemetery, but it was erected long previous to the comedian's death. The plot is on Fir avenue, directly opposite the magnificent vault of the old gambler, Dunser. The monument is of light granite, with the single word "Florence" on the base. It is surmounted by a large cross. Above the cross is a floral wreath, one of the emblematic tributes so frequently found in cemeteries. Only a short distance away is the last resting place of the great tragedian, Edwin Booth, and to the outer world fully, this monument is the most unpretentious of any in the cemetery. Booth's grave is marked by a plain granite slab, and many a time, while my business was residing with Booth, I have stood before the unpretentious monument and wondered why the great actor was not honored with a more costly shaft.

opinion that the flowers of spring would come more appropriately to his grave.

Near by is the grave of Dion Boucicault, the Irish playwright, who died in August, 1890. He was a handsome man, and was very much admired by the ladies. His monument is a plain granite slab, with the following inscription:

AS OF YORE.

The first gun of the Revolution was fired at Lexington, but the first act which led to the long drama of war, closing with the attainment of American Independence, was forcible resistance to the imposition of unjust taxation upon the colonies by their arbitrary English rulers.

Throwing of high-taxed tea into Boston harbor by patriot hands signaled the coming storm of popular fury.

It was the protest of a wronged people against evil governments.

Its effect at the time was potent, and its history remains to-day an honorable record.

A hundred years and more have rolled away since that just rebuke was given King George, but yet the identical wrongs which fired the people of this country are still victims of similar oppression.

Onerous taxation and class legislation distinguish the present, as in the one hundred and fifteenth year of American Independence.

Strange but true.

Stamp taxes are resumed and enforced that purposeless war taxes in times of peace.

Tariffs, not for the legitimate and Constitutional purpose of raising revenue to meet the just obligations and expenses of government, honestly and economically administered, but to foster extravagant expenditures.

Not to give healthy vigor to business enterprise and industry, but to cast impediments in the path of both.

Not to restrain the rolling masses by lowering, as far as possible, the cost of life's necessities, but to increase it for the special enrichment of privileged persons and combinations.

Not to reward and protect honest home labor, but to place it within the grasp of heartless monopolies.

The forefathers resorted to bullets as a weapon of liberty's defense.

American freemen of to-day possess a peaceful weapon of mightier power.

IT IS THE BALLOT!

Grover Cleveland will carry New Jersey by 15,000 and perhaps 20,000 votes. This is a very strong labor union State. The workers are employed in New Jersey and Tennessee and they will make a great campaign against their arch-enemy, Whitelaw Reid. The protective cry will fall flat on the ears of the North Jersey factory employee whose pay has been reduced all along the line since the passage of the McKinley law. The strong Blaine sentiment has been intensified by the unfortunate withdrawal of the Maine statesman. The Republican party will go into the election in the worst possible shape, the Democratic in the best possible.

It is a matter of pride to all Jerseymen to see Governor Abbett playing so distinguished a part in the proceedings at Chicago. He secured the first plank for the National platform, and presented the name of Grover Cleveland to the Convention. It may be Senator Abbett's next few months only. Next March it may be Secretary Abbett of the Interior Department or, perhaps, Attorney-General Abbett, and a splendid acquisition to any administration our great Democratic Governor would be in either capacity.

In the nomination of Grover Cleveland the party and people have a candidate worthy of their support and he should be elected by a handsome majority in next November's election.

Both tickets are unexceptionable; standing with the party they represent and the people at large, and it is safe to assume that they will be triumphantly elected in November next.

AT GRAY GABLES.

New Cleveland Received the News of His Nomination—Free of Congratulations.

BUZZARD'S BAY, Mass., June 24.—A reporter was admitted to Gray Gables this morning to tell Mr. Cleveland and his guests were all awaiting news from the Convention.

The ex-President was heartily congratulated on all sides.

Gov. Russell expressed his delight and predicted that the Democrats with such a standard bearer were assured of a glorious victory at the polls.

Mr. Cleveland said that he was deeply touched by this latest mark of esteem from his party. He felt that as he had declared, that no fellow countryman stood ready to place the mark of approval on those principles for which he was willing to make any sacrifice. He did not think that differences in Democratic Conventions were to be deplored, but in view of the importance of a Democratic success he could not consider any cause for fear that a vigorous or united and effective effort to win in the coming campaign.

Mr. Cleveland's time this morning has been largely occupied in reading congratulatory telegrams from all parts of the country, of which 200 have arrived.

Among those expected to be present as delegates in Boston by the over-ded solicitation of the press. Among those received are telegrams from ex-Governor Abbett, of New Jersey, Gov. Pattison of Pennsylvania, ex-Governor Hoke Smith of Georgia, one or two from members of the Tammany organization and a number of telegrams have been from friends.

Mr. Cleveland was asked if he had received any congratulations from Mr. Hill or the Tammany organization as a whole, but he replied in the negative.

HILL TAKES IT COOLLY.

Declines to Talk Except to Express His Pleasure at the Result.

WASHINGTON, June 24.—Senator David B. Hill, surrounded by the morning papers, was looking cool and comfortable when I found him and made known to him at the apartments in the Arlington Hotel.

The senator was all smiles. He read up his copy of the Chicago dispatches in the Constitutionalist, and when he had finished he said: "I am pleased at the result. I am pleased that the platform has been adopted and that Cleveland has been nominated. I am pleased that the Democratic party has entered the field of battle with a platform and candidates that are entirely satisfactory to the people

THE MEETING OF THE DOLLS.

Miss Bessie Bonnell and Robert Gaston Entertain Many Friends at Their Home.

The Second Art Separation.

The Dolls' Fair and Dance, participated at the Society by Mrs. John Ward Stimson, in honor of Miss Bessie Bonnell's "Brute Indian Missing," which had friend, Robert Gaston, [illegible] years, was given a complete success and a most delightful event of the season, on Wednesday evening, and their interest in the novel idea that all the old Fantasy to rejoice. All the children brought their favorite dolls. Some were hundreds of years old and had been lovingly cherished heirlooms; others were new, fashionable dolls brought from the farthest poles. Some were made by [illegible], some by Scandinavian, Egyptian, Swiss, Dutch, Italian, Spanish, and others of course displayed the glories of the brightest and prettiest modern [illegible]. Some were antiques and most amusing were those which the old dame had invented and toiled assiduously to array in becoming or appropriate costume.

One poor old Mother Hubbard, seated so comfortably in her arm chair as to deceive the shrewdest, gave great merriment to the crowd. Then the most wonderful Punches and Judys and (apparently) warded off flies with a fan, and the cradle beneath her. Little Jack Horner was there in stiffest of costume; little negresses with superb bandanna handkerchiefs; New Zealand or Australian dolls noted to their queer costume; Dutch dolls with their caps, etc. Each one was pretty and comical groups conversing or drinking tea another. Some of the attendance and attitudes were particularly happy.

One table especially popular was a farm scene with woods, hay ricks, cattle, [illegible], boys sliding coasters and a party of merry dolls disporting themselves in the hay and plodding under the trees. The prizes awarded were dainty compliments to the doll by Miss Bessie Blake to Miss Dorothy Ogilvie's Indian that had traveled 8,000 miles in three years. Miss Frank Stimson's Norwegian couple that had traveled 7,000 miles from Arctic seas, and little Miss Shriver's which finally got it by having attended the season through Europe. The best family of paper dolls was Miss Mattie Wadsworth's.

After the awards came a stroll and merry dance of the children and their Dolls of various Nations, and in the evening a second dance of the older young people and the fifty Dolls of the day, far beyond first expectations and indicate it may be hoped, a softening remembrance in Americans toward the brave and intelligent little redskins whose bodies are so long been plundered from them. Of course there were plenty of pretty tables of refreshments rare by still prettier waiters, but all the well-known young families of Plainfield society were present during the day with their little ones, and seemed to enjoy the outing of novelty equally with the children. The whole were brightly hung with many pretty sentiment by the art stamperie of the Seminary.

TEA IN FAIRYLAND.

The Wednesday Tuesday Club Entertained in the Somerville Seminary.

The second of the semi-monthly Saturday afternoon teas given by the Hillside Tuesday Club was well attended, last Saturday. Mrs. J. J. H. Pollion made a most gracious hostess on this occasion, and in receiving was assisted by Mrs. Charles E. Foote and Mrs. Miss Mary E. Wade greeted all the tea table, which in consequence was a particularly pleasant centre of attraction. No less enjoyable, however, was the scene about the long [illegible] at which Miss Wood exercised her powers of pretty entertaining.

The [illegible] pretty cottage that is the club's home was tastefully decorated with [illegible] flowers, roses and grasses. Mid the [illegible] of green [illegible] leaves the tiny fairy lamps. The effect was beautiful and quite novel.

Those who were among the club's guests during the afternoon were Mr. and Mrs. George Hollick, Mrs. Babylon, Mrs. Rue, Mr. and Mrs. James L. Anthony, James Anthony, jr., Miss Anthony, Miss Stone of New York, Mr. Kennedy of New York, Mr. and Mrs. Henry E. Bowen, Major Robert L. Burnett, Mr. and Mrs. E. L. CALL IT A GOOD TIME.

Fielding Entertains a Friend in True Metropolitan Style.

It Is a Little Expensive, But It's Called Correct and There's a Good Deal in a Name—Betting Pole Dancers on the Terror.

[COPYRIGHT, 1893.]

As a rule, when people whom I used to know, but see no more, get to be forgotten, write to inform me that they will visit the city and will be pleased to see its attractions, I politely decline. I want a pressing engagement in the interior of Connecticut. But Sammy's case is different. Sammy has a lot of money, and I could not bear to think of the chance that, in this great and wicked city, he might be robbed by somebody else. I determined to first test him; to stand between his innocence and the lurking palms of my fellow citizens. So when he wrote that he was coming, I promptly replied that I would meet him at Delmonico's for dinner time. His rejoinder by wire requested me to meet one of his friends at seven and breakfast with him at 7:30. I have not breakfasted at that hour since compulsory prayers were abolished at college in my freshman year; and the indications were that his visit to the great city would result in more novelty for me than for him. However, I arranged a little programme which I thought would give Sammy a very fair idea of life and death in the American metropolis. I shall have occasion to describe the impressions so that the reader may get, for the moderate price of a Sunday newspaper, an idea of information and diversion which will cost several hundred dollars more if obtained on the spot.

The first thing that struck Sammy was the elevated railroad. He got a stroke him in an elevated railroad train and nearly tore his clothes off. New York is a wicked place. The unmerciful and comparatively cheerful commotion of Brooklyn, on the one hand, and the boredom of Jersey City on the other, do not furnish sufficient outlet for our surplus population. The way our hall rooms are occupied is a puzzle to a stranger. I thought the spectacle would be novel and instructive to Sammy, who lives in interior Massachusetts city, where one may walk down the principal street in business hours and meet not even a solicitor.

We passed the forenoon as agreeably as could be expected. A forenoon isn't much use anyway. Most people use it to work in, but I never could reconcile myself to beginning a day that way. I took Sammy to Park Row, to show him the big newspaper offices, and for a time we amused ourselves watching a man throwing rolls of paper, weighing five hundred pounds apiece, out of a cart and to the heads of the passersby. Then we strolled over to Broadway to see a man or two run over, and so got pleasantly on to lunch time.

I asked Sammy if he had ever seen a modern buffet lunch, and he said he never had, as I took him to see one. His wife is, and if there be requisite for a man to take him where he could get something to eat, Sammy is a man of diminutive stature, and he fights very well for his size in the light-weight class he is not designed to prowl by a heifer lunch. The alleged nutrition is piled upon a counter, and the animals take food as best they may. By long reach and varied experience enabled me to obtain sandwiches and raisin over the shoulders of the thirsty. Perceiving Sammy at a loss for a cup of coffee, which was poured down his back by a gentleman behind him, I observed that I had some idea of the amount which can be obtained by a skillful, long-legged man by settling my account at the desk.

Later we formulated our plans for the day. I asked him what he had come here to see, and he replied that he had always thought that the statue of Liberty must be ridiculous in Central park, must be very interesting.

"My dear boy," said I, "you can never get any kind of idea here by looking at obscure, inanimate curiosities of that sort. But there is going to be a prize fight in Jersey City to-night that will be a liberal education for a young man," and, in the meantime, we might run out and see Mr. Delafield's bankings. I have a sure thing."

Samuel accompanied me willingly, for his relatives at home had told him to stick close by me and not go running around by himself, for I was a well-brought-up young man should never visit. On the way to the mosquito I asked him what I had started by a sure thing, and I explained to him as much of it as one can really understand without personal experience. He said that he had never bet on anything, but did not think it was wrong if one were sure not to lose his money. He feared him that some of the best people I knew were habitual bettors. Indeed, a few of them were so good that they were not required to put up cash. He remarked that he would prefer to have me bet his money that way, and I was obliged to confess that I was not one of the few.

It is pleasant to watch the childish excitement which possesses a man when he attends a fight for the first time. A delightful emotion lasts all the way down to the ring. It survives the dust and accident of the ride to the ring, but it generally evaporates when he finds that he is to have only about ten minutes of actual fighting, and that all the standing around. I took Samuel into the pen where the enthusiasm for that noble animal, the American man, finds expression in dollars. The pen contained seven thousand more men than it was built for, and the air in the place was open to the air of Heaven, but the air very discreetly remained outside.

While I went to bet our money on the next fight I left Samuel standing on a wooden post which helped support the partition and the equally wooden intelligence of one of the ushers, who was also newspapers professionally. As I had taken charge of all the money Sammy could spare, I did not regard the personality of the professional gentleman as dangerous. When I came back Sammy was looking quite pale, partly from the effects of the cigar which the professional adviser had given him for purity from nervousness over his money. He seemed to suggest that my sure thing might go wrong. Therefore a fresh citizen person who overheard him remarking up the business very freely. I was "Well, Sammy, old boy, what is it?" I asked, as I approached him. "Are you sick?"

"I've been waiting to find somebody to ask you about," he replied, with a little pitiful air of timidity. "I'm afraid that I will disturb you."

It was now time for the first race to be run, and Sammy went out to see it. Then I had to go and get my budget in behind a six-footer just as the horses started, and it was all over before he could move. Then I went to look at the bookmakers and waited for the relief home or more.

I would say that my friend was not having as good a time as he might have had if I had taken him to see the obelisk, so in order to avoid a failure in the proceedings I bet ten dollars of his money on the second race, and lost it. As Sammy seemed touched on our reserve we were obliged to get it back, so, by my advice, we bet twenty dollars on the third race and lost that also. Then, by the process of elimination, we found the other way.

The fourth race was the handicap. As the time for starting it approached, I began to be annoyed at nervous myself. In former days I had noticed that my money on a horse would make me sick to my stomach, but now I was interested to it with a bolter, thereby avoiding any danger of his falling down in front of the first hedge and getting stepped on, or in any other way interfering with the successful running of some stranger, who, although willing had never heard of, and only the bookmakers were interested in. Well, my bolt had not deserted me. When the Brobdignag started my horse was headed so soon, and, while the others were scrambling over the first hedge, by the time the jockey had turned his second there was nothing in sight but a little old distant cloud of dust.

As we wandered away from the track I told Samuel that the prize fighting could be over so much more fun, and besides I know more about prize fighting, and would give a better show if anything. two gentlemen, bar a draw. I have noticed that many men others on their way home something to sight like a little old distant cloud of dust.

right track by a policeman, who was getting the other way. We arrived about 9 o'clock in a great hurry, for the fight was announced for 10, and that hour. But at 10 o'clock it had not opened. At 11 o'clock the master of ceremonies announced that half an hour the men would take their places. But they didn't. It was midnight when the men stepped into the ring, and the commander Terror began a new day well by partially closing the left eye of the Rising Star of the West, and by the use of young friend's money on the Terror—and he never had a chance afterward.

They fought for eighteen rounds, the last seventy of which were spent in waiting for each other to get up. The Rising Star of the West, unable to bear the burden of my backing, fell down and out. The day was breaking and we were all ready to go home, and we were homeward. Samuel was silent and evidently thoughtful. At length his mental agitation found vent in words:

"Howdy," said he, in a sad, low voice, "is this what you call a sure thing?"

"Is this what you call a good time?" Howard Fielding.

NAPOLEON NOT A GEORGIAN.

A Watermelon Episode Failed to Improve the Great Conqueror.

It was at watermelon season held in the presence of the enemy at Rastadam that Napoleon first granted gratuities to privates, officers, sergeants and even knights of the empire and members of the Legion of Honor.

An old grenadier, who had made the campaign of Italy and Egypt, not hearing his name called, came up, and in a few words asked for the cross.

"But," said Napoleon, "what have you done to deserve it?"

"I was Lieut. Alix, who in the desert of Joppa, when it was so terribly hot, gave you a watermelon."

"I'll wager you for it again; but the gift of the fruit is hardly worth the cross of the Legion of Honor."

"But the gratuities are up till then had been so cool as ice, working him and up since the Empire, and I am the nearest washbills." "Well, and don't you reckon seven wounds received at the battle of Austerlitz, at Eylau, Marengo, at the Pyramids, at Aspern, Austerlitz, Friedland, eleven campaigns in Italy, Egypt, Austria, Prussia, Poland?"

But the emperor cut him short, laughing and, unsticking his excited manner, cried: "There, there, now you work yourself up when you come to the essential point. That is where you ought to have begun; it is worth much more than your cross. I make you a knight of the empire with a pension of twelve hundred francs."—Boston Globe.

Herrmann Wasn't in It.

When Herrmann, the prestidigitateur, was in Chicago he had an interview with the Whitechapel club. He seemed as much pleased with his visits as they were with him. Roland Reed did all the fun that prevailed and contributed some interesting sketches from his professional career. The sleight of hand work that seemed more wonderful when viewed from close quarters than when standing some feet away. Toward the close of the session he took a deck of cards and ran them through his hands and at a time, at the strips of unfolding which ran around the upper part of the sleeves, and, with a quick flip of the hand, the section he made the cards stick in the crack between the molding and the wall. He did it was evident that he could have made most of them stick there if he had really wanted to. When he reached the last card he carefully placed it in the lodgment of those that preceded it, he laughed quietly and, flipping the card into the crack, carefully fluffed it down to this date. An evening or two afterward a member of the club who had been present in saw the card and asked how it got there. When told, he gravely got himself a pack, took a card, examined it, and stuck it in the wainscoting about ten inches from the floor. And while it was the janitor found it and asked him how it got there, he replied that he had put it in the morning. Herrmann had to do it. I did this myself the first time."—Chicago Tribune.

Bill Nye's Bee.

Bill Nye believes the hard times he farmers in due to "only not feeding enough bees to their crops." He tells his experience in feeding bees game to a giddy "early-colored lassy," as Josh Billings would call it. At last accounts he is up to the top of his bees' spirits, and has them all safely away over the pasture lots, the hum of their busy wings across the state, and what did not go up the side of my overcoat would climb down my trousers leg and get out at the cuff. But after awhile the air is still, growing and then the black army began to settle down on the fragrant clover, and not more solidity of stomach, more unanimity of purpose, more harmony of action could be found in a Democratic convention. Then I began to see some of the bees that had gone up the side of my overcoat would climb down my trousers leg and get out at the cuff. THE WOMAN OF FASHION Attends a Very Fashionable Wedding in a Very Fashionable Church.

How the Bridesmaids Were Dressed. The Girl in Pale Mauvette de Lirtz. Why Everybody Was Surprised.

Expressly for Sunday.

[COPYRIGHT, 1893.]

It was such a very pretty wedding it was held in a fashionable, little, village church you ever saw, with a pure white marble altar that was piled high with beautiful and fragrant flowers. When I heard them say to proceed to the town that day I pictured it to myself, and this is the way it looked: A sweet, solemn, country sunlight streaming with reverent effect and flashing checks before the nuptial parson; by the side of the rail of the altar, which, also, had a coat of white lilies awkward and a little troubled as to where to put his hands and where to not to, though surely they could find no better resting than on the girl at his side; a little breeze blowing in at the window, fanning the girl's fresh locks that fell about her in place of a veil; a crowding, staring, gaping audience of village folk, dressed in their Sunday best, with bright colored dresses and hats with brighter-colored flowers and ribbons; a few shy nods and responses from the bride, a few stronger but more embarrassed ones from the groom; a quiet walk down the aisle to the bride's home, followed by all the villagers, much kissing and laughing and crying; a grand spread out on the lawn; then twilight, and separation into strolling couples; and last still moonlight, and fiddling and dancing; and after all, the happy groom taking his bride to his own home.

But my eyes opened very much wider than usual when I arrived at the church and found out what was really going on. In place of my shy maiden was a tall stately lady clad in a satin dress of fashionable hue and make, with a train, and in place of the kneeling groom was a long and flowing veil of spotless tarlatan, and in the rear of the bride was a modest glimpse. For the bride was very self-possessed and calm and quiet; in fact almost cold. And there wasn't the slightest trace of confusion to be detected about the groom as he answered the questions put to him, in a clear, even tone. And my village boys were all crowded over in their Sunday clothes, clad in soft and beautiful colors; there were, indeed, a few country fills at the back of the church, but they didn't look well with the others; the colors they wore seemed so coarse and inharmonious beside their fair city sisters. And I sighed and thought, after all, it is only a fashionable wedding.

And having arrived at this deeply philosophizing conclusion, I immediately began to take a great interest in the costumes about me. For it is seldom that a woman's instincts are overpowered for a length of time. Mine soon recovered from the shock of finding myself in the wrong church, and I carefully divert or console her, and carefully—to give it to her in the proper tense—to take in the details of the costumes about me. I was interested in everything that is going on. And so first of all, I noted that the bridesmaids' dresses all of them looked very beautiful.

They were clad in white silk that had satin stripes, and the skirts were made with long trains and had the satin stripes running diagonally. Each skirt had a small satin ruffle, and a pale green silk ruffle, with a puffed heading of green chiffon. At their necks they had a small pale green yoke that narrowed to a V, and was not the hollow of the same shade, that was covered with lace like the ruffles. Over this a blue silk, at the edge of the V was a berthe of delicate lace, and a deep lace ruffle was round the edge of the bodice likewise, headed by a white satin rope twisted loosely. Over their shoulders, on top of the lace, a satin bow fell; it had only one end, which fell to the front in the back, and two ends in front. They carried fluffy chiffon fans, back and the other in front. The sleeves were big lace puffs over green, with deep lace ruffles. Small bouquets. They wore white gloves and white slippers and big leghorn hats with large white plumes standing straight back. In the front were white loops and bows with pale green leaves, and under the rim peeped a small bouquet of them. They tied the streamers which came from the sides of the hat in a very pretty bow. Each girl wore her hair in a plain coil at the back of the head, and the ribbons were brought around the coil, and fastened underneath it, then they separated again, and were brought around and tied under each girl's chin.

After I had admired them for a time I looked at the bride, and thought how pretty she looked beside the white marble altar, and how pretty the altar looked with the white bridesmaids beside it, and how pretty both were with big bunches of roses and peonies tied on them. I began to examine the bridesmaids.

But just then every body arose and I found that the ceremony was over. Then all the people came crowding around the bride and kissed her, and then the groom kissed her, and then all the bridesmaids kissed her, and then the groom kissed the girl and the flower girl kissed by on the knee.

Then I had to endure to see some more kissing. The first that started my sister and a close circle, when she was done, she kissed me, and I kissed her back, and then I kissed the bridesmaids, and then I kissed the flower girl, and then I kissed the groom, and then I kissed the bride, and then I kissed the groom again, and then I kissed the bride again, and then I kissed the bridesmaids again, and then I kissed the flower girl again

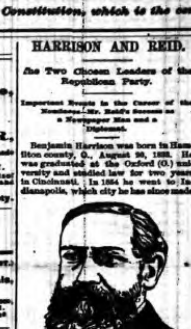
HARRISON AND REID.

The Two Chosen Leaders of the Republican Party.

Important Sequel to the Career of the Monarch Mr. Blaine Becomes as a Wayfarer and a Diplomat.



PRESIDENT HARRISON.

Benjamin Harrison was born in Hamilton county, O., August 20, 1833. He was graduated at Miami (O.) University and studied law for two years in Cincinnati. In 1854 he went to Indianapolis, which city he has since made his home. Mr. Harrison was elected reporter of the supreme court of Indiana in 1860, six years after he had begun the practice of his profession. At the breaking out of the rebellion, he joined the union army, in which he was commissioned a second lieutenant. He was mustered out a seventy-five thousand volunteers who answered President Lincoln's call. After a short service he organized Company A. of the Seventieth Indiana volunteer infantry and was appointed colonel. He was mustered out in June, 1865, with the rank of brigadier general. Returning to civil life he discharged the duties of court reporter for four years. In 1876 he was a candidate for governor on the republican side, but was defeated. He was appointed on the Mississippi river commission in 1879. Mr. Harrison was elected United States senator for Indiana in 1880 as the successor of Joseph E. McDonald and took his seat on March 4, 1881. His term of office expired March 3, 1887. In 1888 he was nominated by the republicans for the presidency and was elected over Grover Cleveland, who was renominated by the democrats.

Jacob Whitelaw Reid, republican nominee for vice president, is editor in chief and one of the proprietors of the New York Tribune. He was born in Xenia, O., in October, 1837. His parents gave him a good education. At the age of fifteen he entered the Miami university at Oxford, Butler county, where he was graduated in 1856. He began the active duties of life as principal of the graded schools in South Charleston, Clark county, in the same state, but did not continue in this occupation long. In 1857 he bought the Xenia News and did such good work on that journal as to give it a reputation wide across the state. This led to his engagement by the Times and Gazette of Cincinnati and the Herald of New York as their Ohio correspondent. The war gave him an opportunity of distinguishing himself as a correspondent at the front. He served the Cincinnati Gazette in this capacity, and in 1863 became a member of the staff of the Herald, publication of which he subsequently assisted in the capacity of associate editor. Democratic Nominations.

For President.

GROVER CLEVELAND,
of New York.

For Vice-President.

ADLAI E. STEVENSON,
of Illinois.

ONWARD TO VICTORY.

The done and alright.

The Democratic National Convention in nominating Grover Cleveland for President of the United States carried into effect the will of the people.

Such action truthfully represented public sentiment, and therefore deserved the eulogium of well done faithful delegates.

Never since the days of Andrew Jackson was the voice of the people, the honest and patriotic masses, so emphatically proclaimed and obeyed as it was in the late Chicago Convention.

It could not be repressed. In thunder tones, without dispersing clouds of eminent men, it declared for the candidature of Cleveland.

Why adch demand?

The reason is as clear as sunshine, and it portrays the very highest grade of honest, deserving candidate ever received a nobler testimonial.

It was because the people, the honestly swayed people, interested solely in good government and the practical administration of equity and economy, repose implicit confidence in the strict integrity and enlightened statesmanship of Grover Cleveland, he having passed honorably through the ordeal of one official term as Chief Magistrate of the Union and proven himself to be then and there the right man in the right place, a vigilant sentinel, whose no human power or personal allurement could budge a mite from the post of duty and allegiance to the best interests of country.

The people nominated him and the people will elect him.

He has been our editorially-expressed first choice from the very start, and it is with joyous pride we now unfurl his name and reiterate his merits as the regular Democratic nominee—

For President,
GROVER CLEVELAND,
of New York.

And as a fitting conclusion, the Convention placed as second on the national ticket the name of a distinguished Democratic citizen of the West, a gentleman of known ability, of Congressional and other political experience, and the recipient of well deserved personal popularity—

For Vice-President,
ADLAI E. STEVENSON,
of Illinois.

AMERICAN INDEPENDENCE.

Monday next marks the one hundred and sixteenth anniversary of the Declaration of Independence.

It will memorize the most glorious event on the page of our national history, the doing of an act which eventually broke into fragments the sceptre of royalty on these shores, and planted secure a standard of sovereign independence that now waves triumphantly over sixty millions of freemen.

The Fourth of July is a day dedicated to the cause of patriotism.

It becomes us to observe it as patriots by laying aside political and other differences, and with unity of feeling and purpose to render the God of Heaven thanks for the priceless heritage we as American citizens enjoy, and to invoke from Him that it shall be transmitted unimpaired to coming generations.

Let the deep-toned cannon roar
From inland vale to ocean shore,
And let the sky illumined be
In honor of Freedom's victory.

Mr. Stevenson, the Democratic candidate for Vice-President, speaking in Congress thirteen years ago of the revolutionary policy of the Republican party of Federal interference at the polls, afterwards embodied in the Force bill, used the following ringing words, which every citizen who values the rights and privileges secured to him by the Constitution ought to carefully read and seriously ponder. Mr. Stevenson said:

"It would be difficult to conceive of a question of higher moment or which more vitally concerns the sacred right of the citizen than that of the exercise of the elective franchise free from apprehension of unauthorized arrest and imprisonment. This is the CITIZEN CORNER STONE OF ALL HIS OTHER RIGHTS AND PRIVILEGES. Are the liberties of the citizen safe when the life and liberty of the humblest citizen is subject to the caprice or by the deputy marshals? He who believes that the American people will consent that their liberties may be permanently be held by so brittle a tenure, has studied the history of our race to little purpose, and the history of the ballot-box must be maintained. None should be permitted to approach it except such as have the lawful qualifications. To these the pathway must be unobstructed and unimpeded. Every guard must be thrown around it to protect it against fraud. But, sir, while this is true, it is all important that the right of the people, unawed by menace, to elect their representatives shall not be abridged. Upon this fundamental right depends not only the maintenance of the independence of the popular branch of our Government, but of the integrity of the Government itself."

Serious Fire Protected.

A fatality which nearly a small store on West Front street, near Madison avenue, left a lamp lighted in her store, Saturday night at 11 o'clock, and returned to her home by a tributary for it. The baby was fooling without a chimney, and during her absence blazed up suddenly, igniting the clothes. Policeman Smith rushed in the fire, and extinguished it. Officer Marsh, from the station house, arrived with a pane of glass, extended to, and joined in the task of the station, preventing a serious fire.

TO THE PRESS AND TO PLAINFIELD

Belongs the Honor and the Glory of Having the First to All This Land to Nominate Grover Cleveland for President in 1892.

Only because the varied claims from clashy people, of many parts, and by many papers, have caused the rise and progress of a doubt as to who by and where Grover Cleveland was first nominated for president in 1892, does This Press put aside the natural and customary modesty to set at rest the question.

The report of the president showed seven cases received true, and satisfactory evidence, and ten cases put forth by the society in looking after and correcting the many abuses existing in and around this locality.

A letter of commendation was received from the Hon. A. V. V. Raymond, of Albany, N. Y., who was one of the original incorporators of the society. The society is doing a good work and ought to be upheld and sustained by the citizens generally. Any cases needing the attention of the society may be reported to the president, Charles Place, 63 Grove street, or to J. B. Ward, secretary, 7 Park avenue.

MANSION, MENT.

J. A. DEMAREST, Esq.

DEAR SIR:—Your letter has been forwarded to me here, but the paper to which you refer has not reached me. I suppose it is at my office in New York.

Though my only political concern is to see the Democratic party true to the Democratic faith and honest in the performance of duty in the cause of the people, I am not insensible to the evidence your note furnishes of your friendship to me personally.

A Democratic Legislature.

Our Republican friends who are talking hopefully of electing a legislature in the fall which will choose a Republican United States senator—says the Hackettstown Gazette—are, in the ugly parlance of the street boy "talking through their hats". The last legislature had a Democratic majority of thirty-five on joint ballot—eleven in the senate and twenty-four in the house. If the Republicans manage to return all the senators elected this fall they would still be in a minority of five in that body. Three of the counties, Hudson, Bergen and Mercer, are more than likely to return Democrats, while Morris is in doubt, and it is more than possible that the Republican representation in the senate will be reduced instead of increased. With the election of an entirely new house of assembly the Republicans would have to overcome a majority in joint meeting for United States senator if there was not the same Democratic majority in the senate to be overcome. With the senate standing as at present they will have to elect thirty-six assemblymen to get a majority of one in the joint meeting. That is to say, they must elect twice as many members as they did last fall. In the extremely unlikely event of the election of seven Republican senators in November they should still be obliged to elect thirty-three assemblymen to control the joint meeting.

It is put in the words. The fairest hope of electing a Republican legislature this fall to choose a United States senator may as well be dismissed for good. The next senator will be a Democrat.

Republican Compliments to Mrs. and Mrs. Cleveland.

(Philadelphia Telegraph—Harrison Republican.)

All political considerations aside, there is one thought running through the minds of the American people to-day creditable alike to the public head and heart. This is the inspiration of gratitude felt for the bright-minded and beautiful woman who, as the bride and mistress of the White House, a few years ago, occupied a place in the hearts of the people of this American people not exceeded by any President's with since the foundation of the Government. To Mrs. Cleveland's personal pride of place in the past as well—there will go our sincerest well wishes. The good mistress of "Gray Gables" never parted with a friend as she trudged in any way into the political arena, and during all the excitement of the coming contest she will scarcely be seen and never heard. But if the attacks of the politics should recall her to the historic mansion where her presence was a perpetual charm that delight, there will be a wave of congratulation that will fill the whole political bounds, no section, no class lines of any sort. To Frances and the baby the average American citizen to-day presents his warmest compliments.

Ingratitude to Governor Abbett.

The True American thinks the effort that is evidently being made in certain quarters to defeat the candidacy of Hon. Leon Abbett for the United States senate as one of the most ingratitude. So does the Press. Mr. Abbett has been the friend of "Whatever may be said against Gov. Abbett, he has broken the Republican strength. New Jersey; has made the Democratic party the party of power, and continued the House of Assembly that it is no longer necessary for the Democracy to poll a two-third vote in order to have a majority in that body. Whatever of success there may have been in Governor Abbett's actions, it has been so blended with the interests of the people, that he has placed his State in a position of political safety and his party in such security that it is now, for the first time, profitable to Democrats to come out and fight for the maintenance of the independence of the popular branch of our Government, but of the integrity of the Government itself."

NIAGARA FALLS IN COLORED FIRE.

Closing and Beautiful Picture Planned for Plainfield's Fourth of July Celebration—Few Words for the Greatest Cataract.

The pyrotechnic display on the grounds of the Central League, the night of July 4, will be probably the finest ever witnessed in Plainfield. Such an exhibition will be a rare treat to the public. The committee, having the matter in charge, has employed Hall's band, of New York, which will precede the fireworks, and will be worth going miles to hear, as may be judged from the following musical programme:

March—"Un Tara"..... Alfred D. Robe
Overture—"La Dame Blanche"..... Boildieu
Selection of airs from "Paul Jones", "Pete Jonathan", and "Hot Stuff".
Waltz—"Free Flirtation"..... Strauss
Fantasia—"The Patriot"..... Gungl
(Solo for baritone by F. X. Dube.)
Overture of American National airs..... Tobani
Intermission from the Cavalleria Rusticana.
Moonlight
Popular selection—"Betty and the Girl"..... Herbert Fantastic Characteristic—"Consonant Dissonance"..... Herbert
March—"Crescent League"—Dedicated to the Masons of the Crescent League.
Alfred D. Robe
Finale.

The fireworks programme is most excellent, and shows how lavishly the League is planning for the entertainment of the people. It is as follows:

Signal maroons or aerial shrapnel, fired from two mortars and exploding at a great height with tremendous report.

Ascent of monster balloon carrying powerful illumination light and colored fires.

Magical prismatic illumination with lights of intense brilliancy, changing color repeatedly, by the electric calcium light.

Flight of 12 colored rockets, celestial stars, comet tourne, peacock plumes, silver streamers, etc., etc.

Nest of blazing fiery serpents; acoustic effects.

Flight of bayonet tourbillions, forming beautiful fountain like cascades of fire in assorted colors.

Fiery whirlwind surmounted by a cordon of golden gerbs.

Flight of grim sacrocits, mammoth rockets the chancellor would vindicate counsel and allow them counsel fees into the bargain. His prediction was verified to-day. The chancellor signed an order appointed Sedin and Mr. March $2,950, to ex-chancellor Runyon $1,500, R. V. Lindabury $1,250, and to Cline, A. Reed, Wm. M. Sullivan and F. M. Voorhees $750 each.

The same gentlemen who had been appointed administrators pending the will case were re-appointed administrators. They are H. B. Pope and John W. Harrison.

The Union County Press Club.

The Union County Press club met Friday afternoon in the rooms of the club, at Elizabeth. The Hon. Foster M. Voorhees was present and advised in relation to matters for the incorporation of the club.

The incorporators are: Joseph D. Lowden, of the Elizabeth Journal, president; A. E. Pearsall, of the Plainfield Standard, first vice-president; Abram T. Pendleton, of the Elizabeth Herald, secretary; John C. Wetmore, Willett T. Bingham, H. A. Pierson, A. W. Schwartz, Frederick Zier, Conrad H. Moore.

New members were added to the roll as follows: Charles H. Schmidt, of the Elizabeth Free Press; J. A. Demarest and Walter Irving Clarke, of the Plainfield DAILY PRESS; Will S. Harrison, of the Elizabeth Journal, and Ira J. Hall.

The club will meet in the new quarters furnished, and the formal opening will take place on Saturday evening next. No cards of invitation have been issued, but all the friends of the club are invited. Mayor Rankin, the Hon. Fred. C. Marsh, the Hon. Foster M. Voorhees, president of the board of freeholders, Sheriff Ogden, Dr. Isham and other prominent men of the county, will be present. There will be some brief speeches and other pleasant features.

The rooms are brilliantly illuminated every evening by the Suburban company's electric lights. A telephone and telegraph instrument was to be included in the equipment of the room. Files of all the State papers, books of references, etc., are to be kept for the convenience of newspaper and public men, and the rooms will be the center for much information.

The "Courier's" Rise Illustrating Facilities Not Appreciated.

The Somerset Democrat says: "The Plainfield Courier has at the head of its editorial column the names of Cleveland and Reid. Poor Harrison; even the Courier already gives him two black eyes."

The Democrat, for a wonder, is wrong this time. Those cuts are not pictures of Harrison and Reid. They appear to be two worn-out "I took your pills and was cured" physicians. One has taken Hood's Pinkham's brother as much as it does like anything. The other evidently was taken to the asylum for the cure of the American people not exceeded by any President's with since the foundation of the Government. To Mrs. Cleveland's personal pride of place in the past as well—there will go our sincerest well wishes. The good mistress of "Gray Gables" never parted with a friend as she trudged in any way into the political arena, and during all the excitement of the coming contest she will scarcely be seen and never heard. RATHYING THEIR TICKET.

Plainfield Republicans Indorse Their Convention's Nominees and Platform, and Make a Rousing Night of It—Be Ready to Find With Cleveland Though, But Unqualified Praise Issued from Plainfield's Newest Mayor.

(From The Press of June 29.)

The first Republican ratification of the present Presidential campaign in New Jersey was held in Plainfield last evening. The local Republicans turned out in good force, and, after enjoying out-door music by Gottman's band, assembled in Music Hall to listen to campaign speeches.

The Hon. John Ulch of Plainfield, State organizer for the party, called the meeting to order, in the absence of chairman of the city executive committee, and made a fulsome speech in support of the Republican ticket and in praise of the Republican platform. Plainfield's Al-Xander Gilbert, the city's popular Mayor, for president of the meeting, and Mr. Gilbert was unanimously elected to occupy the chair.

The Mayor made a strong and able address in support of Republican principles, and told how warmly he had been received by the party ever since he had cast his first vote for "the immortal Lincoln". He pointedto the list of "great men, the splendid names, and the brilliant constellation," in the record of that party. But his stand was a digressed one, and in all fairness he gave credit to Grover Cleveland for the fair and honorable personal record he had made during his administration. He admitted that Mr. Cleveland had served the country faithfully, and the Republican party was entitled to praise accordingly. Indeed, he had no wort of blame to cast against the ex-President, but would only expose the principles of the party by whose votes he was now seeking re-election. Mr. Gilbert spoke in high terms of Harrison's "splendid administration", and urged the voters of New Jersey to turn out in full force and for once give their majority to the Republican party, which rule had so blessed the country.

Other effective speeches were made by major Z. R. Pangborn, who has for thirty-five years been a leading war-horse and stump-speaker in the partyand ex-mayor Gilbert Collins, of Jersey City. All of the speakers of the evening were liberally applauded.

A telegram was made in reserring the ratification resolutions that the close of the evening. At the outset there was a large and respectable audience, including a number of women, but as the rain came on them, but the speeches were so long that as the hour grew late the people kept leaving the hall; and finally there were more empty seats than there were those on the stage to read them to. They were adopted, however, as follows:

Resolved, That the Republicans of Plainfield heartily indorse the action of the Republican National Convention in re-nominating President Benjamin Harrison, and in associating with him on the ticket Whitelaw Reid, of New York. By the nomination of these two gentlemen for the office just drawing to a close, President Harrison has shown his ability as a statesman; in his administration of affairs, at home and abroad, in his courageous and efficient foreign policy has made the United States in a commanding position in international affairs. Whitelaw Reid, the brilliant editor, journalist and diplomat, is eminently qualified to assist the President in the discharge of the duties of the office to which he has been elected, and we believe him to be a man of affairs and a man whom the people can trust. Therefore be it

Resolved, That we congratulate the Republican party on the splendid nominations made by their National Convention; and on the platform adopted, pledging the party to a firm and honest support of an honest currency and protection to American industries. And be it

Resolved, That we will use our best efforts to secure the election of Benjamin Harrison for President, and Whitelaw Reid for Vice-president.

Those occupying the stage were chiefly the following officers:

Several stirring songs were likewise ably punctuated with music by the band and salutes by the cannon. There was considerable enthusiasm, but no envy in the campaign the people seem not to have thoroughly aroused.

The Mayor made a strong and able address in support of Republican principles, and told how warmly he had been received by the party ever since he had cast his first vote for "the immortal Lincoln". He pointedto the list of "great men, the splendid names, and the brilliant constellation," in the record of that party. But his stand was a digressed one, and in all fairness he gave credit to Grover Cleveland for the fair and honorable personal record he had made during his administration. He admitted that Mr. Cleveland had served the country faithfully, and the Republican party was entitled to praise accordingly. Indeed, he had no wort of blame to cast against the ex-President, but would only expose the principles of the party by whose votes he was now seeking re-election. Mr. Gilbert spoke in high terms of Harrison's "splendid administration", and urged the voters of New Jersey to turn out in full force and for once give their majority to the Republican party, which rule had so blessed the country.

Other effective speeches were made by major Z. R. Pangborn, who has for thirty-five years been a leading war-horse and stump-speaker in the partyand ex-mayor Gilbert Collins, of Jersey City. All of the speakers of the evening were liberally applauded.

A telegram was made in reserring the ratification resolutions that the close of the evening. At the outset there was a large and respectable audience, including a number of women, but as the rain came on them, but the speeches were so long that as the hour grew late the people kept leaving the hall; and finally there were more empty seats than there were those on the stage to read them to. They were adopted, however, as follows:

Resolved, That the Republicans of Plainfield heartily indorse the action of the Republican National Convention in re-nominating President Benjamin Harrison, and in associating with him on the ticket Whitelaw Reid, of New York. By the nomination of these two gentlemen for the office just drawing to a close, President Harrison has shown his ability as a statesman; in his administration of affairs, at home and abroad, in his courageous and efficient foreign policy has made the United States in a commanding position in international affairs. Whitelaw Reid, the brilliant editor, journalist and diplomat, is eminently qualified to assist the President in the discharge of the duties of the office to which he has been elected, and we believe him to be a man of affairs and a man whom the people can trust. Therefore be it

Resolved, That we congratulate the Republican party on the splendid nominations made by their National Convention; and on the platform adopted, pledging the party to a firm and honest support of an honest currency and protection to American industries. And be it

Resolved, That we will use our best efforts to secure the election of Benjamin Harrison for President, and Whitelaw Reid for Vice-president.

Those occupying the stage were chiefly the following officers:

I am not a child, or a menial, nor a slave, to be treated like an irresponsible being, and I just want you to know that I won't stand it, either, so there, now! PERSONALIA.

George Winans, of Washington Valley, is stopping at Asbury Park.

The family of W. L. Patton will leave town Friday for the Leslie Cottage, Asbury Park, to spend the summer.

L. S. Bond, superintendent of the Boys' club, has accepted a position as basso soloist at St. John's church, Elizabeth.

Miss Kate Kimball, general secretary of the Chautauqua, Circle at Buffalo, is at her home in this city for a week's visit.

Mr. and Mrs. R. Blair and family, of East Second street, have gone to Ocean Grove for the months of July and August.

Mrs. D. D. Vermeule and daughter Maggie, of Peace street, are visiting Mr. Vermeule's brother Charles, at Asbury Park.

Comptroller Williams of the G. R. & of N. J., drove a party over from Elizabeth who invented the symbolic standard. The earliest men had them. The Romans fi the time of Romulus found patriotic inspiration in the sword of state fastened to a pole. Miss Burton's description of the symbolic meanings of the various pat terns which go to make up the flags of the different nations was the first of many to spread through the audience.

"Unwritten Music" was the theme that Miss Lillah E. Cooley read about. The voice of the speaker was in tuneful very melodious, and her fanciful treatment of nature's harmony was delicious. She made ego think of running water, singing birds, soft-blowing winds and beautiful bells. Neither poem nor music selected chors could approach the beauty of the unwritten music of nature was the idea that Miss Miss Cooley's essay on the "New England Roots of the American Elm" was a bright, attractive paper, and she read it well. The present sturdy American type of National power was traced to its beginning. Miss Cahoone told of the early Puritans, of their settlement of islands off the Massachusetts coast, and of the wisdom that the country's strength came from these men. They were the roots of the grand Republic of to-day. Her description of Nantucket and Martha's Vineyard, were good.

Owing to illness, Miss Grace J. Carroll was unable to be present at the Conference meeting of Miss Addie P. Ackerson, read her essay on "The Power of Ideas." Miss Carroll proved that the man with ideas always was, is, and always will be the commanding power of the world, and she wrote that the rewards awaiting young men and women with good ideas were many, and added that the truest fame was gained when onward to fight battles and win victory.

"The Sisterhood of Three Great Religions" was the theme Miss Charlie A. Ingleman discussed. His three religions were Buddhism, Mohammedanism and Christianity. The history of each was detailed by Miss Ingleman. Their creeds were explained, and the effects of their teachings were shown. The beautiful religion of Jesus Christ was the one great religion, he said, and the world will not be perfect until all forms of worship from the countless people who lived lives that conformed to their teaching?

The editor of THE PRESS does not believe in publishing the essay and valedictory address delivered by the valedictorian simply because it is customary. The valedictorian of the High School class of 1892 is Miss Grace Howard Fetrie, and the subject of her valedictory is "The American Nationalist". The PRESS is impelled to give prominence to Miss Fetrie's effort because such evidences of intense patriotism fill it with pleasure, endeavors to recognize in Plainfield's young men and women. Miss Fetrie's essay and valedictory remarks are therefore given below:

THE MODERN METHUSELAH.

A modern writer of great prominence made the following statement: "I am not at all sure that Abraham Lincoln did not live longer in his memories, and in that of supervening centuries, aspirations, enjoyment and sorrow, in all that makes up life, save the mere fusion of time, I am not at all sure that he did not live more years than Methuselah." The PRESS is inclined to think that the author of the above statement is right. Who of us did not form some of our early ideas of the higher mathematics from the old Methuselah? "Was the oldest man that ever lived," was the first thing we knew about him. Then we learned that he was the oldest man that ever lived. Then we learned still he was over one hundred. Yesterday this period of his life was not at all remarkable, but to-day it is extraordinary. Yesterday the life of the child of the present day. To-day the youth becomes the aged patriarch. To-day he is the object of the most tender solicitudes for surpass those of the smallest child. To-day all varieties of the pleasures of the world, while Methuselah had opportunity to study only the very simplest of these. To-day a child of eight or ten takes a book of travel and sweeps over the whole world through Europe, Asia and Africa, and all lands. To-day a child of history he becomes familiar with the heroes of all ages he takes Plutarch's Lives, Gibbon's Rome, Hallam's Middle Ages, Prescott's Mexico, written by noble scholars and famous about wonderful conquests and heroic deeds. When he went to school his geography consisted of a few pages about the earth, and on foot or on the backs of slow animals. Now he has a geography of a volume or two, and can be carried in or per hour. Methuselah knew little more than this in his time.

We must draw the broad negative of ocean in a week's time, but such speed would have startled Methuselah. He would be horrified to hear of an ocean or the best of navigation, as the ark was only to be compared to a coffin, and the first ocean steamer would not compare with the modern vessels. Methuselah knew little of the world in which he lived. It took almost one half a day to go from the Garden of Eden to Mt. Ararat, a distance of about five hundred miles.

Consider what the modern inventions are to us. The ancient world knew little of steam or gas, would have accepted Methuselah for years. But we must not find fault with him. He did the best he could. Could he help it? Could he only see the work that is going on in the building cities—the monuments that are publishing houses, the many exchanges—all would give him a clear idea of the rapidity of the modern life. He could see the steamboats and car conflicts of all ages and from all countries. He could see how the lightning and electricity is to us. Now, by it, our sisters are turned into day, our meals and our cities are lighted, messages are sent by it all over the world, our diseases are healed, our machines of all kind are made and moved by it, and we are to become more and more dependent upon it as new uses for it are discovered.

How Methuselah would have had no newspaper! It was fortunate that he was ignorant of what he was losing, or he would have fretted, and not have been the godly man we suppose him to have been. But the modern newspaper would have driven him mad. Think, within a few pages we learn the news of the world for yesterday!

Daily we must men who have searched for more in their sheet. Even then Methuselah in the days of his youth would have considered it fair game for the world's welfare than he, for the first thousand years of his life the advancement has been made than in the other hundred and sixty-nine years of Methuselah's life. Methuselah would have been driven to the wealth at his feet; he has but to reach forth and gather the treasure.

VALEDICTORY.

Citizens of Plainfield—Through your aid this school has been made what it is. You are proud of the success that has been attained and well done for us. We thank you for your interest, shown on this night, and at many times during the past year. You are here to-night, and we, that our Principal, Miss Bulkley, is about to leave us that she has been called to add a better interest not only in our public school system but also in each individual connected with it. In the words of the Board of Education Journal she is the cause of "a thank you for the noble work done and the inspiration" of the High School. Such a course of study has been established that after graduation we are able to enter the leading colleges and the scientific schools of the country. You have established a standard of excellence which will make our school the best possible, by the quality of our work we have tried to show our gratitude.

Classmates—We have had privileges given us by our instructors not only those of the textbooks but even of many in our own country; Everything that others have been able to do for us has been done for us. We have had the opportunities and each member of the class knows how faithfully this has been done.

We are familiar with the couplet:

"Thrice is he armed that hath his quarrel just

and on this we have based our entertainment again drawn to the fact that we are living in the golden age of opportunity, that we are called upon to do our part in the world's service to us by the early struggles of our fathers and forefathers, and we will not fail.

Better 67 years of our life
Than 999 of Methuselah's.

GRACE HOWARD FETRIE.

The flowers presented to the graduates by admiring friends and proud relatives were unusually beautiful. Miss Bulkley was not forgotten this year, for a very numerous basket of exquisite roses was sent to the stage for her after Miss Fetrie had finished her remarks.

The graduating were addressed this year by the Rev. Dr. William R. Dirpsa, professor of Biblics in Rutgers college. He was introduced by President Babcock. His address is one of the best ever heard on a like occasion, being crowded with sharp and witty remarks appreciated by everyone. His idea was that the day of occasion was one of congratulation; yet he warned the graduates from taking the attitude of one young man just out of college whose exalted opinion of himself led the questioning remark: "Are you anyone in particular?"

Rev. Dr. Dirpsa took his seat, Mayor Gilbert came to the front of the stage and said in substance:

MISS BULKLEY—It would hardly be considered an appropriate ending of this very interesting occasion if we should omit to make making some allusion to yourself and your labors amongst us during your connection with the public schools of this city. For many years you have been recognized as an important factor in our educational work—for eleven years you have stood at its head,—upon you has rested the great responsibility of shaping and moulding the characters and destinies of the boys and girls who have been committed to your charge, and you have most nobly discharged your responsibility is evidenced by the success that has attended your efforts. It is most indeed, to be congratulated upon to you, on the eve of your departure from our midst, to know that your work is appreciated and that the people of Plainfield profoundly regret that the tie, which we had hoped would bind you to us for many years to come, is to be severed. You have won for yourself a warm place in the affections of our people, and the only consideration which enables us to regard complacently the proposed time has existed between us, is the knowledge that your sphere of action is to be one of the most honorable position. That you will do it with great credit to yourself and to the satisfaction of your employers we have no doubt, we can readily believe—and it is our desire that you should carry with you to your new field of work, not only the pleasant memories that will cluster around your Plainfield life, but also the warmest wishes and prayers for your future welfare.

You have been faithful here. The success which you have achieved for yourself, as the result of your labors, proves your faithfulness. It furnishes a bright illustration of the thought that rewards are always in waiting for those many, many years after your unselfish desire to labor for success. The extent of your work and influence can never be known. It is enough to know and far-reaching enough to give to our school system an enviable reputation throughout the State, whose will" shall be revered in the hearts of the boys and girls who have received instruction and guidance which will serve to keep fresh and strong your memory for long, long years to come.

The sentiments which I have endeavored to express have been embodied briefly in a set of resolutions by the Board of Education, these resolutions were presented to you and I now do so with a great deal of pleasure.

As Mayor Gilbert concluded his remarks he handed Miss Bulkley a hand somely engrossed set of resolutions prepared under the direction of the board of education.

The resolutions were handsomely bound in album form, and consisted of five pages in rich gray cardboard, with a unique design on each page and signed by each member of the board. The treatment was in Payne's gray, Winsor and Newton's flake white and India ink. The covers were of a light golden brown with white watered silk, and the book as a whole was a work of art and will be all the more highly appreciated by her as it was designed by W. Woodward Smith, a past graduate of the High school under Miss Bulkley; who has already won for himself an enviable place as a designer.

Miss Bulkley seemed deeply affected for a moment by the mayor's glowing tribute to her worth, but recovered sufficiently to say:

"I wish that I deserved all that has been said of me."

The presentation of awards was made by Dr. John B. Pangborn, the winners of the prizes are named below:

After the exercises at Music Hall a large number of the persons directed their steps toward the Stillman High School to participate in the reception given by the retiring principal, Miss Bulkley, to the graduating class. At 11 o'clock, several pieces from Capps's Seventh Regiment Band appeared and enlivened the scene with very lively music. Then a grand promenade followed in order. The refreshments, consisting of cream and cake, were served in good style in the basement. The display of the drawings by the different classes reflected much credit upon the work of Miss Lucas, the drawing teacher. The crowd dispersed at 1 o'clock.

NORTH PLAINFIELD GRADUATES.

What They Spoke About—A Splendid Commencement.

The Commencement exercises of the North Plainfield public school, held in Warren Hisbee chapel, last evening, are said to be the most successful ever held. The chapel was well filled with friends and parents of the graduates.

Sitting on the platform were Mayor Gilbert, Principal C. E. Rose, President of the Board of Education S. St. J. McClothen, School Trustee E. L. Bonney and Samuel D. Drummond.

A delightful match was played on the piano and organ by Miss Carrie Randolph and W. H. Miner. The graduates marched in and took their seats on the platform during the playing.

The first number on the programme was singing by the school under the direction of W. H. Miner. Miss Carrie Randolph was the accompanist. During the entire programme the music by the school was of the most commendable, and reflected credit on Mr. Miner.

It is quite difficult to pass comment on the various speakers of last evening, for never has such a superb array of graduates been called upon to address a public audience that distinction is hardly possible. The programme that followed was as given in full in last night's PRESS.

Among those especially well rendered were "Nations and Humanity," by Walter Raynolds. This was given in a clear and forcible manner. "The Better of Brugge," by Miss Lillian Avery; "Columbus," by Miss Gertrude Conover; "A Musical Instrument," by Miss May MacDonald; "A Walk at Sunset," by Miss Nettie Gardner, and "The Secret of the Sea," by Miss Margaret Belle Lewis, were all very well spoken.

Warren D. Church gave a declamation on "Whitewashing", which was very good and showed that the speaker knew what he was talking about.

Miss Mary Adelaide Lewis gave a delightful recitation on the journeys and life of "Columbus".

Miss Lillian Avery rendered a medley, which brought forth loud applause. It consisted of all the old-time songs arranged in a most pleasing manner.

Miss Beatrice Saunders recited "The Monk's Vision" with much force and clearness. Chauncey F. Colthar declaimed on the subject of "Why Not Go to Divide" with much power and eloquence. "The Bible Legend", by Miss Alice Needham, was very good, being well spoken and distinct tones.

"Harmonon", by Miss Leanore Williams, and "The Bicycle Ride", by Miss Josie Coddington, were very much enjoyed and appreciated. Miss Anna E. VanArsdale told in an interesting way of "The Petrified Fern". "The Dignity of Labor", by Edward Lambert, was exceedingly well given. It showed much thought and study. "A School-room Colloquy", by Miss Elsie R. Horne, was very good and gave a vivid description of the subject.

The musical selections went to make up the complete success of the evening. The diplomas were presented by S. St. J. McClothen, president of the board of education. His remarks were very appropriate. He told the friends of the school how successfully it was conducted by a competent principal, and teachers. Addressing the graduates he gave them excellent advice, telling them that "When a man leaves the army he likes an honorable discharge, and so we, too, are going to give you each an honorable discharge."

The scholars, he continued, were ready to accept any honorable position they might be called to, and he hoped they would make the best of life and be of benefit in the world.

Mr. McClothen then presented the certificates to the retiring scholars, and after singing by the school the exercises closed.

CLEVELAND RATIFICATION.

The Chorus of the People, the Boom of Cannon and the Glare of Fireworks Testify Gratification in This City Over the Chicago Nominee.

The Democrats of Plainfield proved how far ahead in enthusiasm they were by a grand demonstration Friday night over the nominations of Cleveland and Stevenson for president and vice-president. An immense throng assembled in front of the Park House office at 8, where the Independent drum and fife corps delighted them with excellent music, and the scene was made bright by the glare of numerous calcium effects. Several hundred rounds were fired from a brass cannon which was located on the turreted circle of Somerset street and Park avenue. Two Fame office a large body of citizens marched behind the drum corps through some of the principal streets with the sky shapes then illuminated by fireworks.

After returning to the starting point, James E. Martine addressed the multitude in a ringing manner, while cheer after cheer went up for Hon. Roger A. Chotee—Grover Cleveland. For an impromptu affair it was a grand success, and the enthusiasm displayed for the Democratic nominees was an evidence of the people's satisfaction with the ticket.

Many residences were illuminated along the line of march, and the whole affair presented with cheers and fireworks. It was expected that Judge Nathan Harker would be present to address the assemblage, but business prevented him. Other efforts at out-door speaking prevented his attendance.

—The property owners on Front street, from Grove street to Madison avenue, are considering the advisability of giving two coats of Portland cement to one side of the roads taken by the new railroad company.

A FINE ENTERTAINMENT.

St. Mary's School Scholars Render Charming Concert.

The first entertainment of St. Mary's school was held Friday night in Music Hall. The house was filled with friends of the school, very few seats being unoccupied. The concert was given under the leadership of Prof. Guttner, furnished the music.

When the curtain was raised a very pretty stage picture greeted the audience. The scholars were seated on the stage, and opened the exercises by singing "Columbia, Sing in Wonder Tones."

The tableau "Rainbow", representing all the colors of the rainbow, was very pretty. This closed the first part of the programme.

The second part was opened by a piano trio by Misses E. Kelley, A. Roth and K. Curtis.

The "Death of King Canut of Man Norse", a concert recitation, was one of the best numbers on the programme. The recitation of the participants was noteworthy.

The tambourine drill was well arranged, and the evolutions of the young misses pretty and facile. A vocal solo by Master Thomas Connealy was exceedingly well rendered. He has a very promising voice.

The medley Dance by twenty cleverly acted, and created much laughter.

St. Mary's Cadets appeared next and sang "Our Gallant Boys in Blue". They made part second with a commendable drill.

A vocal duett by Misses J. Schaffer and J. Day was very well sung and much applauded.

The following young ladies have completed the prescribed course of studies, and in testimony thereof were awarded diplomas and laurel crown: Miss Katie Quinn and Miss Julia Day.

Other class prizes, also prizes for fidelity to Holy Mass and Sunday-school will be given on Sunday afternoon at the Sunday-school.

Miss Katie Quinn was the valedictorian of her class. Her essay was unusually excellent, and THE PRESS takes pleasure in reproducing it in full:

THE END CROWNS THE WORK.

"I sleep and dreamed that life was beauty.
I woke and found that life was duty."

Many years ago, and some we have never heard these lines, have learned from experience, the lessons they teach.

Life is a stern reality of short duration and every one, therefore, should be up and doing. Life is like a race, the earliest dawn of our reason, we perceived the starting point, and we have been hurrying on to when the "course is spent" that we both were destined to pass.

Some, indeed, in starting out in life, no doubt have a noble object in view, and that, too, a worthy one, but when they reached it, love it and learn to derive pleasure from the labor required for the attainment. As a natural consequence they disregard, in a measure, all secondary goals in success, therefore the lives of the great men of our nation's history were filled with trials and the obstacles they had to encounter: But they gained the victory.

Let this sentence stand to misfortune, "I'll not be overcome."

When Columbus conceived the idea that he could find a new and shorter route to India, and the nation to which he belonged took to aid him? Did they who would reap all the benefits, should his ideas become real, do so? Not a single one. But he persevered in his struggle going from one crowned head to another under the supposition of, and being well known, but his persevering energy overcame every opposition. The World's fair, which will be held in 1892, will be a vivid description of the subject.

The mental selections went to make up the complete success of the evening. The diplomas were presented by S. St. J. McClothen, president of the board of education. His remarks were very appropriate. He told the friends of the school how successfully it was conducted by a competent principal, and teachers. Addressing the graduates he gave them excellent advice, telling them that "When a man leaves the army he likes an honorable discharge, and so we, too, are going to give you each an honorable discharge."

The scholars, he continued, were ready to accept any honorable position they might be called to, and he hoped they would make the best of life and be of benefit in the world.

Mr. McClothen then presented the certificates to the retiring scholars, and after singing by the school the exercises closed.

SIDNEY DILLON'S LIFE.

Incidents in the Career of the Noted Financier.

Dillon was a Poor Boy—Early Struggles—How He Succeeded—One of the Industrial and Most Powerful Men in the Country.

SIDNEY DILLON.

The career of Sidney Dillon, of New York, who died a few days ago, affords one of the most notable examples to American history of the possibilities which await men of talent, industry and integrity.

Mr. Dillon was born in Ashfield, Mass., in the year 1812. His father was a farmer, and Sidney was brought up to the same occupation. He received a common school education, and when he was 21 years old he left his father's farm and went to Canada, where he engaged in the lumber business. He remained there for two years, and then returned to Ashfield, where he married Miss Sarah Sherwood, a daughter of Judge Sherwood, of that town. Mr. Dillon then went to Ogdensburg, N. Y., where he engaged in the forwarding business. He was very successful in this, and in 1836 he removed to Oswego, N. Y., where he established a forwarding business on a larger scale. He remained in Oswego for about ten years, and then removed to Chicago, where he became interested in railroad building. He was associated with Alexander Mitchell, the president of the Chicago & Milwaukee Railroad, and with Mr. Mitchell he built the Chicago & Galena Union Railroad. He was also interested in the Chicago & Rock Island Railroad, and was one of the builders of the Chicago & Iowa Railroad. He was also interested in the Illinois Central Railroad, and was one of the builders of the Chicago & Alton Railroad. He was also interested in the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad, and was one of the builders of the Chicago & Milwaukee Railroad. He was also interested in the Chicago & Rock Island Railroad, and was one of the builders of the Chicago & Iowa Railroad. He was also interested in the Illinois Central Railroad, and was one of the builders of the Chicago & Alton Railroad. A King Killed by Fright.

One of the most remarkable instances in history of death by fright is that of King Frederick I., of Prussia. He was actually scared to death by his wife. He was one day sleeping in an armchair when his queen, Louisa, of Mecklenburg, who had been hopelessly insane for some time, crept up from behind him and made her way to his private apartments. As mentioned above, Frederick was dozing when his wife, dressed in a pure white gown, dashed through the plate glass in the door and threw herself in a raging, frenzied manner. In breaking the glass she of course cut herself most horribly. The king had not been apprised of the approach of her case, and was astonished beyond measure at the appearance of the woman, clad only in linen and covered with blood. His shrieks aroused the whole palace, but it was not until Louisa secured the king himself was found to be in a raging delirium. From thisday never recovered, but died trying to hide from terrible phantoms.

Queer Facts About Gold.

A cubic inch of gold is worth, in round numbers, $300; a cubic foot, $592,380, and a cubic yard, $9,797,760. this on the basis of $18 per ounce. At the beginning of the Christian era there was $437,000,000 of gold in the world, but at the time of the discovery of America the total of the world's gold supply had been reduced to $57,000,000. The amount of gold now in use is estimated at between $10,000,000,000.

Spray Deserters.

From the beginning to the end of the war of the rebellion there were 268,000 desertions—exactly 1 in 11.

CARPET SPLASHERS.

They Are Serviceable, Easily Made and a Great Protection.

Carpet splashers or protectors of some kind are necessary in all closets and bedrooms with carpeted floors, and in many houses such floors are still found, for there are few with last summer's expenses with the warmth and comfort afforded by carpets, notwithstanding the amount of labor required to keep them clean and wholesome.

If there is no bathroom in the house, a washstand in the sleeping apartment is the usual substitute, and in such a case one cannot bathe with comfort unless the carpet is properly protected from the splashing of water.

A rug or "guard" made of matting, so large that one may move about freely upon it, is one of the best things ever used for this purpose. It is also handy when giving the baby his bath.

For occasional use one needs only a strip of matting, which may be laid down at the ends, with a short binding strap sewed to the middle of one end. When bath is finished the strap and matting are fined by winding the strap around it, when it can be left standing in a corner of a closet or other convenient hiding place until wanted again.

But for daily or hourly use in a chamber, nursery or sick room, where one desires a permanent protector, the rug illustrated is very pretty. It is shaped by a width of closely woven matting pained with a running vine-like design of long leaves, with two shades of brown —oil colors.

The initial letter sketch shows the first part of the work, the first heavy foundation lines in the darker shade, each produced by a single stroke of the brush; the lighter shade is added last, by drawing the brush in a slightly reversed direction at the tip of every heavy stroke nearly to its base, giving it the appearance of a long, curving leaf (one such leaf at the tip of every heavy line).

Rightly stretch the design with a colored pencil on unbleached muslin with a piece of bread, or the design might be original; when complete, rub off the bread crumbs and mark a more pure than pale shade (an occasional wiping with cold salt and water), and wear is rapid and durable.

Nothing more appropriate could be chosen to place beneath a plant-stand in a family room. The decoration would be pretty in shades of leaf-green or in faded red.

A similar guard is very serviceable in a large bedroom, and in a small one the chamber vanished by a wood stove; it should extend well toward the stove so as to catch all scattered bits of coal or bark; such litter is much more easily removed from matting than from carpet.—Youth's Companion.

SICK ROOM "DON'TS."

Don't tiptoe. A tiptoe will seem times cause more disturbance than if carefully, squarely placed footfall. Don't tiptoe.

Don't whisper. A whisper will often wake a light sleeper, when an ordinary voice would not. Don't whisper.

Don't sniff or sigh. Sniffs and sighs may better be indulged in in the open air where a gust of wind can blow them away. Don't sniff or sigh.

Don't handle rattling papers. The folding and unfolding of papers that "rattle" is well calculated to "rattle" invalids, to say nothing of those who are strong and well. Don't "rattle."

Don't shout, or allow the voice to be keyed on a high note. Shouting may be a necessity in connection with the treatment of "insane" people, but it should be counted a luxury for indulgence in-doors, or when associating with those who are "dead as a post."—Don't shout —Good Housekeeping.

CRUDE PETROLEUM.

Its Value in the Household is Not Generally Understood.

Very few housekeepers understand the full value of crude petroleum in the household. It is not always easy to get the crude oil, and when obtained it is much more expensive than kerosene, a pint bottle costing from 25 to 50 cents in the drug stores, where it is sold. It is one of the best oils that comes for filling hard wood floors. It not only cleans out the dust, but it gives a soft, new polish to old furniture, which it is dressed with, and, unlike other oils, it does not stay on the surface, but evaporates rapidly with slight rubbing. The hard wood finish on the interior of houses, which has become scratched, may be more successfully treated with crude oil than with anything else that we know of. It should be applied with a soft flannel cloth, and rubbed in with a hard cotton cloth or a pad made of cotton cloth.

The use of crude petroleum in cases of rheumatism and some skin diseases is well known, and, strange as it may seem, is of very great value. For many centuries the Baku well, of St. Catherine's, has existed, near Edinburg, over the coal measures, which is famous for its cures. It is now known to be nothing else than a petroleum well. The well was said to have come into existence from a portion of holy oil accidentally dropped on that spot by Saint Catherine, once on a time of pilgrimage. It was for centuries a resort of pilgrims, at its miraculous cures were famous. —N. Y. Tribune.

BOB FORD'S DEATH.

The Cowardly Slayer of Jesse James Passes Through Denver.

Bob Ford, who shot and killed Indian Deputy Sheriff Edward Kelly in a dance hall in Creede, Col., a few days ago, has been notorious throughout the west for many years and feared as a contemptible character since he killed Jesse James, the outlaw chief, in a St. Joseph (Mo.) cottage on April 3, 1882. He came into Colorado when the boom first started and has been there ever since, except for short or several weeks, when he was forced to leave by the authorities for having for promiscuous shooting in the streets while on a drunk with Joe Palmer. Kelly, who fought Ford in a dance hall, is the man who was reported to have killed him last February, and the row a few nights ago is supposed to have been due to the former quarrel, of which Kelly had the worst. At that time he swore vengeance against Ford, and was always expecting to be downed by Kelly or some one else. The shooting was done with no other words than "Halloa, Bob," from Kelly and none at all from Ford, who died instantly. Kelly is now under arrest and guarded by an unknown, who is supposed to have handed him the shotgun with which he killed Ford.

Bob Ford's death is not regretted. He has had several rows in Colorado, but, being a coward, never went into any fight without an advantage. He has been held in contempt ever since he killed Jesse James in such a cowardly fashion in that St. Joseph cottage. Jesse James, because of the extraordinary nerve he always had carried, was forced to retire to that cottage, where he lived with Bob and Charley Ford, the two men who later on betrayed him and killed him.

chance to catch their chief without his gun, and finally did so when he had put aside his belt and revolver in order to straighten a picture on the wall. In the most treacherous manner Bob Ford then sent a bullet through the head of his chief and gave himself up to the authorities. This cowardly murder created a sensation throughout the whole west and Ford was in danger of being lynched. He was indicted, proved guilty of murder, and sentenced, but was pardoned in the court room by Gov. Crittenden, to whom it was learned he had given promise to commit the murder.

TO RESCUE PEARY.

The Ship Which Carried the Party North-ward Is Ready for Sea.

The relief party sent by the Academy of Natural Sciences of Philadelphia to bring back home Lieut. Peary, his brave wife and band of followers from arctic fields is set sail a few days ago.

Lieut. Peary's party of North Greenland explorers was landed by the Academy of Science's first Greenland expedition on the east shore of McCormick's bay, in latitude 77 degrees and 40 minutes, on July 21, 1891. McCormick's bay is a branch of Murchison's sound and is about seven hundred miles from the pole. After unloading the stores and building a house for the party the Kite, with Capt. Pike in charge and the wedding party on board, steamed away from home on July 30.

When Peary was landed he was carried off in a litter, as he had broken his leg several weeks before. He was given a sixteen months' supply of provisions, seven tons of coal, besides a good supply of kerosene and alcohol.

The situation of Lieut. Peary's party is this: As far as last winter was concerned they were as safe as regards fuel and food as though they were living in Canada. The danger that awaits them is the possibility of their being forced to leave the ship before the end of a second winter, in case no relief ship can get to hand, or the possible disasters that might overtake them were they to attempt to make their way this summer along the coast.

Besides Lieut. Peary and his wife there are five other members of the party. The chief man is Longdon Office, of Long Island, the ornithologist J. M. Verhoeff is the next man in importance on the expedition. The other members are Astrup, a Norwegian, and Watt Henson, a Philadelphia colored man.

The ship in which the rescue party sailed has a steam launch which the explorer was carried to Greenland.

A PUZZLING QUESTION.

Does the Upper Half of a Wheel Travel Faster Than the Lower Half?

This question is one which should apparently be easily settled by a scientist. Yet it is the scientists who are puzzling themselves about it. Not long ago, says Chicago Rambler, it was generally claimed that the upright position of the rider on a bicycle was held by inertia balancing by the rider, thus keeping the gravity over the base, and that a high wheel, other things being equal, therefore was firmer on its base than a lower one —in fact, it has often been proven that one can ride on a high wheel without the rider is in coasting position (with legs over the handle bar) than when the feet are upon the pedals.

The moving base idea, one would naturally argue, applies to the rolling wheel in the same manner that it does to a stick balanced upon the finger, but the solution does not satisfy a scientific man down to the bottom who claims that in centrifugal force the correct answer to be found. He says, with reason, that a wheel is kept upright by the direction of the centrifugal force. For the purpose of his argument, a wheel is like a ball and rolls forward, backward or to the right or left as the motive power is directed. The centrifugal force created by pressure upon the pedals increases and is strongest at the outer edge of the wheel. If the wheels were suspended, the base or center would be the hub and the force would be equally great all around the rim, but with a bicycle the ground is that base or center and the rim or periphery is being expanded away from the center, the wheel most revolves if the force is strong enough, and in that respect the high wheel can be proven. Place a buggy wheel against the wall, affix a pencil to its rim and roll the wheel. It will be found that the pencil will trace semi-circles, not circles, thus showing that the center of gravity of the wheel's weight revolves is on the ground.

If O is will mark the path of the pencil in the center of the wheel, between D D B that is the lower. Their relative

A Wonderful Woman.

Physically and mentally, the late Secretary Bayard's daughter, Mrs. Henry Schwerin was, in truth, the most remarkable woman in the century. Born on February 28, 1862, it was not until 1888 that she had any serious illness. Imagine eighty-five years of married life and 26 children! Such a life is a beautiful beauty and goodness. It is true that the late cranky duchess had to endure the loss of her husband and half a century of widowhood, and that one by one she mourned the death of all her children, but that is one of nature's penalties for the privilege of it one of attaining to old age. Such a love and affection which existed for so many years between the grand old couple as that of the late Mr. Bayer Williams, was the great happiness of her long life, and its countless acts of unassuming goodness made it a blessing to herself and others. That there must have been much that was remarkable in the character of her leading days may be judged by the enthusiastic admiration which the sight of her evoked in the lovely face developed in the cynical philosopher poet Heine, who confessed that to gaze upon Your Schwerin's perfect features and features made him feel better man.

What He Wanted.

"Miss Quillock," said the young man earnestly, "I have been calling on you steadily for more than a year, and I think I have perhaps hitting that now I should propose to you. I have been thinking the matter over, and I have come to the conclusion that I love you."

"I may say," he continued, as the fair young creature by his side began to pant to nestle in the strong arms that were all his, "I may say that I believe you love me, too. Am I right?"

Then Miss Clara, one evening two months ago, as we were sitting side by side, she let her head suddenly throws open and your elder brother entered and whispered something in my ear."

"I do," she replied, "but George, dead, what has that to do with the subject in hand?"

"Only this," he blessed through his set teeth, "that I should get back that drop shirt he borrowed."—Judge.

The Cottage by the Sea.

It's been written up in story, It's been sung in rhyme
In captivated thousands with its symmetry (meaning)
Of beauty,
But it's a fact, nevertheless, that the Cottage by the Sea,
Is not what you have pictured it to be.
It might have been fixated half a hundred years ago;
But now it's out of business, when that cottage you shall seek,
You'll find the sign up, "Boarders Twenty dollars by the week."

—Boston Transcript.

Changing Her Mind.

"The rooms will suit me exactly," said the lady who was on a househunting tour, "and the price is reasonable enough, but—but I may as well tell you. We have six children."

"That will make no difference, ma'am," replied the owner of the flats. "We don't object to children."

"Then I don't want the rooms," rejoined the lady with decision. "This must be a dreadfully unneighborly neighborhood."—Chicago Tribune.

A Mystery.

"Paw, how wide is the Mississippi river?"

"In some places, my son, it is now ten or twenty miles wide."

"And how wide is a railroad track, paw?"

"Four or five feet. Why 'do you ask?"

"Cause the fellers that made this X, Y and Z railroad map have got it just the widest of any I ever saw."—Texas Siftings.

Mark's John.

"Professor, are you reading from your own book?" said Mark of the Daily Hatchet.

"What are you going to do about it?"

"I don't know," said Mark, still, a whisper Sapleo, "unless we cut Mark Twain's John."

Sketches of Notable New York Literary People.

John Bonner, Walker's Remarkable Career—The Editor of Harper's Monthly and His Great Work—Julian Ralph's Success.

[COPYRIGHT, 1892.]

Writers and editors of to-day differ widely from those of a half a generation, but it must not be supposed that romance went out of the profession of letters with the advancement of the good taste to withdraw. Many of the names associated with our leading magazines bristle as much as the chronicles of him who knows the secrets of the inner circle.

Take the case of J. Brisben Walker, the editor and proprietor of the Cosmopolitan Magazine. He has had a career remarkable for many of the phases of change and contrast. Few men have had so wide a range of experience, and I know of no one who has ever made such a mark as he has made after many years of relative failure. There is no trace of any of his remarkable traits and characteristics in the stern Head of his regulation-featured face. There is hardly a gray hair in his short black locks, although he must be, to-day in the neighborhood of forty-four years of age. He has been throughout a man of remarkable fortitude and self-reliance.

A Pennsylvanian by birth, at the age of ten Mr. Walker entered a Methodist school in Washington, D. C. He pursued his studies at various schools for the next few years, finally graduating from West Point in 1858 to enter the military service of the Chinese government at the instigation of Hon. Anson Burlingame, who was on his way around the world as ambassador of that country, accompanied by Hon. J. Ross Browne. Returning to the United States in 1860 he engaged in mining and in the Kanawha valley and in active interest in politics and was nominated for congress in the years 1873 and 1874 he lost his entire fortune. Turning to the meanest work at hand he procured a series of articles for the Cincinnati Commercial-Gazette on the mineral and manufacturing interest of the country.

Mr. Walker shortly afterward became managing editor of the Telegraph, and early in 1876 was made editor in chief of the Washington (D. C.) Daily Chronicle, and for three years was engaged in journalism. In 1878 he removed to

HENRY MILLS ALDEN.

Denver and engaged, in a small way, in the mining business. He was a pioneer in the introduction of that wonderful plant, and gave his farm his closest personal attention, wearing overalls and flannel shirt, working in the stitches, or spending his day on horseback, and the end of ten years made a ranch on the line of the great Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe railway system. He was engaged in a series of engineering operations which secured from the Platte river an area equal to that of two hundred acres adjoining the Union depot of Denver and almost in the heart of the town.

With all this business and the farm, from the sale of his property he has come to the rescue of the Cosmopolitan Magazine and has made a handsome financial success.

For more than twenty years Henry Mills Alden has been managing editor of Harper's Magazine. With the solid fulcrum of such a publication, even a pigmy lever would insure enormous influence, but he would be a positive force in any sphere of human activity. He is in complete harmony with the traditions of the great publishing house which practically foster but one identity—that of the magazine itself. On the surface the individual is subservient to it, but simply one of the hidden springs contributing to the vast ocean of literature which overspills the pages of Harper's. It happens that the managing editor, in that capacity, is a comparatively unknown man. But his associates are seen and known only by the few. They are not encouraged to go beyond the reach of accidental discovery that, without a guide's services, they are sincerely made welcome.

Daniel C. Beard's "Moonlight" is beginning to be spoken of frequently in literary circles among those who enjoy discussion of social inequalities. "Moonlight" could not have been produced by anybody but Dan Beard, and to read it is to get a fair view of the author. He is the son of J. B. Beard, R. A., and was born 40 years ago in Cincinnati. His childhood was spent in that city and at Painesville, O. He was educated in the public schools of Cincinnati and at the Art Students' League, New York. Worrall's academy in Covington, Ky., where he studied the human figure anatomy and prepared himself for his profession as civil engineer.

With the visions of big suspension bridges, massive aqueducts and difficult railroad tunnels floating through his head, he accepted a position with Mr. Earnshaw, C. E., in Cincinnati, and for weeks dragged a heavy iron chain over the dusty limestone roads and quarries, or with a bulky sledge drove the oak stakes home in the mud of Mill Creek bottom. He left Mr. Earnshaw to take a place in the office of R. C. Phillips, at $5 per Week, $2 advance of just $52 per week on his previous salary.

He soon afterward took a position in the city civil engineer's office, and then one in topographical engineering under Gen. Bickenlooper. Later and more remunerative professional engagements brought opportunity for study which he eagerly accepted, and in the next few years he made surveys for many city, town and village between the Mississippi river and the Atlantic, the gulf of Mexico and the great northern lakes.

It was during this period that social problems attracted his interest, and he never missed an opportunity of interviewing employes of the workmen in the shops, the mines and the fields.

While in New York on a vacation, Mr. Drake, of the Century Company, made him a proposition that he illustrate some natural history sketches, personally he had never been placed in so favorable a position for the display of his talents.

Julian Ralph was born in New York city in 1853. He received fair schooling, and then, as he puts it, "went to college in a printing office." He took a four years' course, beginning in 1867, and then started the Leader in Red Bank, N. J., which swamped him financially in eleven weeks. He had the usual fortune of a newspaper writer for a time, and at last became connected with the staff of the New York Graphic. There, in 1875, he made his first real hit. In his reports of the Beecher trial. These won him a good place on the Sun, which he held until recently, with the interludes of a year when he was city editor of the World under Mr. Pulitzer.

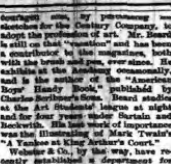
MEN AND WOMEN.

How They Endure Pain, Suffering and Illness.

The General Opinion Is That Women Suffer More Than Men, But Stand Them Better—The Reasons They Are More Used to It.

[COPYRIGHT, 1892.]



CESAR LOMBROSO.

Dr. Lombroso, the progenitor of legal medicine in the university of Turin, Italy, and one of the great lights of modern science, is at present engaged recently with a new theory which he calls "the physical inferiority of women."

He declared that the common conception that women are more sensitive than men is an opinion that is not confirmed by scientific research. He had made a hundred experiments with the esthesiometer to measure the sensitiveness of touch in women, and had found it to be in general nearly twice as obtuse as that of men. He had made experiments with the algometer on "no less than fifty women" to test general sensibility and sensitiveness to pain, and from the results he is inclined that women are characterized in general by a marked degree of sensory obtuseness.

From some of the principal surgeons of Europe he had learned that women follow themselves to be operated on with astonishing insensibility. By distinguished dentists he had been told that women undergo dental operations with more fixidity than men, and do not scream nearly so frequently in the dentist's chair.

He concludes that women suffer less pain than men, both moral and physical, because of their less sensitive nervous organization, and declares that this hypothesis is the only one that will explain the greater longevity of women.

But the leading neurologists, surgeons, physicians and dentists of New York refuse to sanction the great man's arguments. They give him high praise as a scientific genius and an original thinker, but not one could be found who agreed with him on this question.

"No," said Dr. Charles L. Dana, "I cannot agree with Prof. Lombroso's conclusions, for my experience as a physician directly contradicts them. Lombroso is a thinker of striking originality, who has opened new paths of scientific investigation that are leading to great results. Undoubtedly he is one of the great geniuses of this century. But in this particular case it seems to me that he has drawn his inferences from insufficient data.

"The results he has reached by his tests with the esthesiometer and the algometer must stand as many facts, and so far as they go they are of value. But fifty tests are not enough to establish a rule. At least a thousand persons would need to be examined in order to make a trustworthy general inference. And even after he had got a result for the Italian race it might not be true for the Anglo-Saxon race or the Americans. And again, nervous sensibility varies so much in the same person at different times, and with different physical conditions, that a test which gives one result to-day may give a very different one a week hence.

"My observations as a physician have convinced me that women suffer more pain than men. For forty years of life, in the same person, the woman suffers three times as much as the man—sometimes it is pains in parts or yards, the proportion will remain the same—three to one. It seems to me that the sensory nerves from all parts of the body to the brain are more open to impressions in women than in men, and their nerve centers less firmly tacked down, as it were, and so there is more excitation of the brain in women and quicker response to outside irritation, and consequently more feeling.

"The nervous apparatus of women are more subject to derangement than are those of men. Nervous diseases are more common among women. Even in some parts of the body do not show the same liability to nervous disease in the two sexes. For instance, neuralgia of the face is much more usual among women, while neuralgia of the leg is more common among men.

"Do women show more moral resistance to pain than men? Do they make it more a matter of duty to have courage and conceal the fact that a thing hurts?

"That is what I was educated to believe," replied Dr. Dana, "and what I always did believe until my experience as a physician reversed my opinion. It has been my observation that women care more about being hurt than men do, and that they will not go as long with out having a thing that pains them attended to. But when a case comes along who is afraid of being hurt he is a terror—he is worse than any woman."

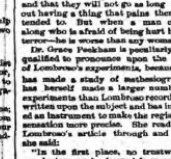
Dr. Grace Peckham Murray, a lady well qualified to pronounce upon the value of Lombroso's experiments, because she has made a study of neuropathy, has herself made a larger number of experiments than Lombroso records, has written upon the subject and has invented an instrument to make the register of sensation more precise. She read Prof. Lombroso's article in the Forum, and she said:

"In the first place, no trustworthy conclusion can be formed from such insufficient data. Many times that number of experiments would have to be made before a valid conclusion could be drawn.

"In the next place, men in general have a more critical, better trained judgment than women, and they can better report the sensations they feel in the course of these experiments. This invalidates, to a certain extent, the testimony of women as compared with that of men as to their tactile sensitiveness.

"And in the third place, Weber's esthesiometer, which Lombroso says he used in making his experiments, is not trustworthy, for it does not record with precision. In using an instrument requiring such delicacy of handling the amount of pressure from the hand of the operator will make great differences with the results. It takes that amount to proceed and to make the same to all operators. The instrument he used takes no account of pressure.

"In regard to genitourosus to pain, you know if you have ever had the misfortune to have a felon on your finger you feel like a martyr. You feel as if you could endure anything but that pain. Yet the same person who suffers from a felon will endure the pain of childbirth without a murmur. Now, I think that every physician will agree with me that the pain of childbirth is greater than that of a felon.



"It is true that men groan oftener in the dentist's chair than women do, and that they endure less pain that must be suffered in it with much less facility. But that is far from proving that they feel more pain. It simply proves that that makes the most fuss about it. They are the cowards, and a dose of the wrenching, and even of the cold appearances were the only things to be considered the most sensitive to pain.

"A few years ago I was a considerable of it. I saw a couple walking before me this morning that made a startling picture. The man was clad in a light, cool summer suit. The little woman by his side was covered all in black, but she looked cool and charming as if the thermometer had been sixty instead of ninety. She was a genuine Gretchen, sweet and plump and fair, with a faint color on her cheeks and a pompon gold in her hair. Her dress was of black faille, made very simply, with deep black jet points at the edge of the skirt, the same deep points around the bodice's edge and also at the neck. But what was most attractive was her perfect neatness. Although her train was very long, there wasn't a speck of dust on it—she held it up so well—and I caught a glimpse of a pretty neat of a dainty, spotlessly white skirt —a most refreshing sight after our dusty walk. Her little hands were matched her hair, and her black lace bonnet had fallen back and was standing up from it. The two looked so comfortable and so happy that I followed them a long time, watching them as they talked and gently stopped now and then, evidently together seeking the look of distress that came over her face when the lace of her tie loosened. She stopped right away to fix it fastened, and I heard her say: "There it is right," as I passed them and went on, thinking all women should be as charming and dress as quietly as this one.

"But, don't you believe it? Even if you haven't the remotest idea of buying one, isn't it delightful to pick up a lot of the pretty things and open and close them with a snap, and fold them behind your head and admire yourself in the mirror as you strut one, all puffs and ruffles, over your shoulder? It is nice to have one for every gown, but if that is out of the question, why, do the next best thing and pick out a pretty one that will harmonize with your favorite gown. Here is a bit of mine saked me to do for her, to purchase a parasol that she could wear with a blue summer gown, and I stood and hesitated long before these two.

Number one—White chiffon ground, and over it, star-shaped, so as to cover it entirely, are powdered dots of exquisite pattern; jabots of chiffon running from center to edge at wide intervals; the edges finished white and fluffy; innumerable fine white ribbon loops in the center, on top of the stick; stick in cream, well shaped, with an ivory ball at the handle.

Number two—Black moire, all covered with black net, put on like palm leaves; each palm leaf trimmed with a ruffle of crepe lisse around the whole parasol; the stick black bamboo, with fancy carved handle.

"Which of the two would you have chosen?"

I chose the white one at length, for I knew the maiden had a favorite dress that would doubtless be seen on many occasions, and that would look particularly well to carry parasol with the white sunshade. The color of the dress is a pale pink, and its skirt has no train, but she wears it full sun over the shining sands without holding it up. It has a very deep ruffle of the same pink as the dress, headed by a ruche—bounded by a closely-twisted muslin rope. At the belt is a narrow band of pale fawn velvet. The neck is cut in a rather low V, and a pretty lace fichu falls over the shoulders.

THE FAVORITE PINK GOWN.

and knots itself carelessly in front. Her sleeves come only to the elbow and the lace that falls from them only brings down very much farther, so that she looks cool and airy on the warmest of days. And when she shall raise that white sunshade over the pretty figure and take a stroll on the sunny beaches of green grass, there'll be no resisting her, I know.

Mother Simpson had come to Boston, and bought a new "set of china." There it was, in its glory of white and gold, and every boy and girl admired enough, apparently, to set a table for "all the king's men."

Sammy, don't be such a sinful waste, sister!" asked her brother's wife, who was still using her old "mulberry pattern" ware. "You're getting awful careless, an' you won't need no chiny long."

"I may not need it long, but I need it now," said Sammy boy coolly, "and long enough, apparently, to set a table for "all the king's men."

"Well, I don't jestly see how," said Mrs. Simpson, with a puzzled look. "You're awful careless, an' eat off on't, an' that's all any on us do."

"Set my table! Yes, but have I ever give a tea-party? Now, Lavizy Edwards, Aunt 17! I've been invited out over's over town, an' need own retaliates!"—Youth's Companion.

Democratic Nominations.

For President,
GROVER CLEVELAND,
of New York.

For Vice-President,
ADLAI E. STEVENSON,
of Illinois.

HONESTY.

Honesty is the grandest of virtues, and, as has been truthfully declared—"An honest man is the noblest work of God."

Honesty in all the minor transactions and relations of life, honesty in the conduct of business affairs, and honesty in the discharge of every official duty, constitute a character worth far more than hoarded millions or the most exalted position.

The present age needs honest men, and nowhere more urgently than in public office.

Men whom political opportunists and sordid combines dare not approach and cannot control.

Men who will promptly and fearlessly execute every given trust.

Men who conscientiously and without fear or favor do what they believe to be right.

Men who consistently carry professed into practice.

Men who accept public place alone ambitions for the public welfare.

Such a man the Democratic party presents for popular approval in its Presidential candidate,

GROVER CLEVELAND.

TARIFF EDUCATION.

Application has been made to the World's Fair Directory for permission to affix to foreign articles exhibited, placards showing—

The price where produced.
The cost of transportation.
The rate of American duty levied.
The selling price in this country.

That would be figure fact data worth knowing.

Will such a practical and proper request be granted?

Not if the McKinley tariffites can prevent it.

Why?

Because it would at once knock into flinders their preposterous assertion that foreign exporters, not American consumers, pay the tariff taxation.

We hope the figures will be prominently displayed. Their silent argument would be irrefutable.

PROHIBITION POLITICS.

The Prohibitionists have evidently developed into a full-fledged political party, judging from the unlimited diversity of sentiment in their National Convention at Cincinnati regarding candidates and platform planks.

Say what you please about the Prohibitionists, they certainly deserve credit for independence of action and fearless expression of opinion. Among their adopted resolutions was the following:

"Tariff should be levied only as a defense against foreign governments which levy tariff upon or bar out our products from their markets, revenue being incidental. The residue of needed necessary to an economical administration of the Government should be raised by levying a burden upon what the people possess instead of upon what we consume."

That is steering closer to the shore of free trade reciprocity and direct taxation than any other party in this country ever ventured.

The information which comes from Connecticut that many life-long Republicans in that State are going over openly to the side of Cleveland and tariff reform and that the people are well familiar with the sentiment in New England towards the tariff question. Ever since the passage of the McKinley Law, there has been in all the New England States a steadily increasing body of Republican voters who have reached the conclusion that the only way by which New England industries can secure to them the materials necessary for their continued existence is by leaving the Republican party and voting with the Democrats. They demanded free raw materials of the McKinley Congress, and were not only met with refusal, but with higher duties. That was satisfactory proof to them that there was no hope of relief through the Republican party. The consequence is that the Connecticut tariff plank attracts them. The Times gives the names of a large number of former Republicans who have come out openly for Cleveland in Connecticut, and we are in constant receipt of private information which convinces us of a similar condition of affairs in other New England States. We judge from the faint-hearted way in which the leading Republican organs take hold of the tariff issue that they have heard news of this character and are filled with doubt in consequence as to the expediency of making the party on the extreme "McKinley tariff basis."—N. Y. Evening Post.

FREE COINAGE.

The United States Senate has passed a Free Coinage Bill, the text of which is as follows:

"That the owner of silver bullion may deposit the same at any mint of the United States, to be coined for his benefit, and it shall be the duty of the proper officers, upon the terms and conditions which are provided by law for the deposit and coinage of gold, to coin such bullion into the standard dollars authorized by the act of Feb. 28, 1878, entitled 'An act to authorize the coinage of the standard silver dollar and to restore its legal tender character'; and such coins shall be a legal tender for all debts and dues, public and private. The act of July 14, 1890, entitled 'An act directing the purchase of silver bullion and the issue of Treasury notes thereon and for other purposes,' is hereby repealed.

"Provided that the Secretary of the Treasury is empowered to have coined all the silver bullion in the Treasury purchased with silver certificates."

The vote on its final passage, 39 yeas to 25 nays, showed partisan mixture, 16 Democrats and 13 Republicans voting in the affirmative, and 7 Democrats and 18 Republicans in the negative. The bill has gone to the House for disposal.

Democrats have a fair prospect of carrying the States of Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Michigan and Wisconsin, which together contain a straight electoral vote, or more than double the number assigned to New York. The men of the West revolt against swallowing the nauseous pabulum prescribed as party fidelity by the Republican National Convention—McKinley tariffism.

Some Republican party leaders declare that their candidate will this year have a walk-over on the Presidential race course. All right, gentlemen, take it leisurely, but look out for bruised limbs when the Democratic nominee rushes by!

President Harrison's apparent hostility to the Blaine element in the Republican party may gratify personal feeling, but it won't attract voters to his political standard.

ALL EAGER FOR OFFICE.

Amusing Pranks of Union County Republicans Seeking to Wrest Public Honors from the Stronghold of Democracy.

[Union County Letter in New York World.]

Mr. Kean may prove a much stronger candidate than people generally think. Everybody laughed at him two years ago the Republican convention as a sort of forlorn hope placed him in the field against that sound old campaigner, Miles Ross, and everybody was amazed when the pitifully unknown young man snowed Ross under by fully two thousand majority. Some years ago Mr. Kean got into other stalwart ranks of the Blaine wing by a fervent time carrying the district which had steadily been growing more Democratic. These two successful runs give Mr. Kean a stock as a clever politician away up, and, supplemented with his money, make him a really formidable foe to encounter.

Mr. Kean wants the nomination and is not afraid to tell his friends so. He is the mother's favorite son and can point to his record of honors in the financial aid he wants, even if he did not have hundreds of thousands himself.

The Republicans are all at sea as to who will be their Congressional candidate, and in this differ radically from their opponents, who have three pronounced candidates already in the field, with a half-dozen genuine dark horses in the background. It is safe to bet, however, if John Kean is nominated for Governor, he will do his utmost to get his friend, Peter M. Voorhees, to consent to take the Congressional nomination. Foster doesn't want it and will fight hard against the use of his name, but he will probably be forced to succumb for the good of the party and make the race.

Assemblyman and freeholder George Kyle, of Fanwood, is spoken of as a likely Republican candidate for the county clerkship. There is no doubt Mr. Kyle, if elected, could accomplish all he has promised Chamberlain, of Rahway, seems to be a favorite, however, with the leaders of his party. His only formidable opponent, ex-judge Urich, of Plainfield, does not seem to be working his boom very much these days, and it is whispered that if the judge could get the Republican nomination he would let Rahway's chief executive have a clear field for the clerkship.

Surrogate George T. Parrot is easy in his mind so far as Republican candidates for his place are concerned. His party concede that George is the strongest man that they could put up for the position, and he will be renominated by acclamation. He has made a model surrogate from a purely business standpoint, and his Democratic opponents will not bear witness to the uniform courtesy with which they have been treated. Surrogate Parrot runs everybody alike, and has exhausted all his popularity, and it is safe to predict that he will poll the largest vote of any Republican on the ticket. Whether it will be enough to win can better be guessed when his Democratic competitor is selected. Who the latter will be is a difficult matter to predict.

Ex-Assemblyman Runyon would not have the nomination if he wants it, but it is rumored that Mr. Gerber's friends will try to push him for the county clerkship. Mr. Crowell, the present incumbent of that office, will seek a renomination, and as he has only served one term and part of another, his supporters claim he is entitled to the place for a second. The chances are that he will get it, as Rahway must be recognized in the make-up of the slate.

WHO MR. STEVENSON IS.

President Harrison's New Secretary Known, and Congratulations Run.

Letters of congratulation continue to pour upon Hon. A. E. Stevenson. The most important one is one which arrived Thursday from President Harrison's new Secretary of State, John W. Foster. In it he expressed the latter's personal congratulation and good will, on the subject of Mr. Stevenson's nomination. Mr. Foster was one of Mr. Stevenson's warmest personal friends during his stay in Washington four years. Their friendship reaches back to the days when they were both representatives in Congress.

Pastor Cleaver Secures Harrison.

The annual celebration of the Fourth, on the Woodmansie Methodist Episcopal mile back of Bound Brook, was highly interesting, and included music, the reading of the Declaration of Independence by lawyer F. H. Cook, and an oration by the Rev. J. B. Cleaver, formerly of Plainfield. In the course of his speech Mr. Cleaver gave some powerful arguments for Democratic principles, and his effort was listened to intently. In the evening, fireworks on the avenue among the 400 gave pleasure to a large crowd.

Who Campbell Is.

In a speech in the United States Senate, Tuesday, Senator Stewart, of Nevada, said of Campbell, the new chairman of the Republican National committee, and it is a providential dispensation (as the preacher say) that he has no children. "Campbell is the lead attorney, and nothing else, of F. D. Armour. He haunted my committee room continually, and got a telegram from one end of the country to the other, representing Armour and his beef monopoly at Chicago. He is the man who advised Armour to defy the legists of the United States and refuse to obey its subpœnas. This man is nothing but a tool of monopoly. He was the adroit and most pliant instrumentality in the hands of Armour and his company, in order to rob the people, and especially the cattle-raisers of the West." —Of course he is at the head of the Republican National committee. He is the sort of man to do the work. Why should he not be there? Armour pays plenty of money to Republican campaigns to get his tariff of extortion, and Campbell is right in their work of rewarding pets and rendering valuable services to the party in charge of the functions of monopoly, and extortion. He can be depended upon to do the dirty work for ARMOUR and his associates or syndicates, and will not refuse to accept a subsidiary.

BRIGHT BITS FROM THE VISITOR.

Pen Pictures of Interesting Events from Every Department of Our Schools.

Church services begins promptly at 11 during the summer months.

Mrs. Herbert Welsh and daughter, Dorothy, are at James McGee's until August 1.

Gilford McGee is home again after another hard year's work at Yale. Everybody is glad to see him.

Charles Ingleman, who graduated with honor from the High school, hopes to enter college in the fall.

By placing a partition in the primary room in Monroe Avenue chapel, a fine room has been made for Mr. Morgan's young men's Bible class.

The Rev. Charles H. Bruce, pastor of the Fifth Presbyterian church, Kansas City, a classmate of the pastor, will occupy our pulpit on Sabbath evening, July 26. He is a very able minister, and all our people should hear him.

When the street cars are running our people should frequently take occasion to attend the services in Monroe Avenue chapel. A few visits there will impress you with the earnestness and success of the work going on in that neighborhood.

The Burt family are all at home again. Miss Florence is back from school at Hackettstown, and Miss Clara is home from Wellesley, where she graduated this year with high honor. She expects to occupy a professorship in one of our higher colleges, and will succeed admirably.

Mr. Douglass and family, of Brooklyn, are spending their second summer on Willow avenue, North Plainfield. They are members of Sumner Avenue Methodist Episcopal church, and while in Plainfield are regularly found in their pew in the church. We hope they may permanently reside here.

Bishop Newman preaches for us Sabbath morning and evening, and in the afternoon Superintendent Dr. Newman, now one of our Bishops, was the pastor and initiated friend of General Grant. We will not say that the man preach who could command the respect and love of the greatest soldier of modern time.

On Wednesday, June 1, occurred, at the family home, Evans, the wedding of Miss Willard and Miss Edna Haff. Miss Haff was the eminently successful primary teacher at Monroe Avenue Sunday-school, and in every way a most charming Christian young lady. Mr. Willard is a New York business man, an old friend of the family, and a most worthy gentleman. James McGee assisted in the marriage ceremony.

The Young Ladies' Mission circle recently sent a fine broadcloth, tailor made dress and clothes to the president of the Oklahoma district. A good dress-pattern and bonnet were sent to his wife, and also many other useful garments. James G. Peck, of Berkeley avenue, gave the fine cloth for the minister's suit. A most touching letter has just been received from the minister's wife, expressing their gratitude, and explaining some of the hardships of the work on the frontier. The young ladies are encouraged to continue their good work.

The new Sunday-school in Park Place chapel has been regularly organized by the pastor. The disciplinary constitution has been adopted and officers and teachers are having duly elected. The list of officers and teachers is as follows: Committee in Charge, appointed by Official Board—H. E. Carroll, the pastor.

John Valiant, Edwin Loomis, Jas. W. Jackson. Sunday-school officers—Superintendent, John Valiant; Assistant-superintendent, A. A. Taft; Secretary, H. E. Griffen; Treasurer, John Valiant; Chorister, Edwin Loomis; Organist, Mrs. Wilfred Powell. Teachers—H. E. Reynolds, Mrs. J. Christopher. Ladies' Aid Society—President, Mrs. E. P. Stevens; Vice-president, Mrs. John Valiant; Secretary, Mrs. Wilfred Powell; Treasurer, Miss Alice Carroll.

TEMPTED BY FARMER'S DAUGHTERS.

As a Result of Fair Women's Pleadings, a Smallpox Resident Is Let up for Repairs.

Thomas Coakley, a highly respected citizen of Smallpoxtown, was calling on a neighbor, Sunday morning, when some of the feminine members of the family showed him a bevy of young chickens, for a nest of robins that were just ready to fly.

Mr. Coakley is not as young as he used to be, but he is just as gallant as ever, and, being a bachelor, he wished to oblige the ladies, even if the tree was an old one and a difficult one to climb.

He made the climb and got the nest out on a limb toward the nest, when he was attacked by the old birds, which flew fiercely at him in their endeavors to protect their brood. Just as he reached for the nest, which was just above him, the limb beneath him broke, causing him to fall about 20 feet, and landing him upon a heap of rocks. He fell on his side, bruising his hip and side severely, but fortunately no bones were broken.

The young fellow-citizen was still in the nest. If anyone wants them, he says, let them get them, as he intends to stick to terra firma hereafter in spite of the wiles of fair women.

Alliance Child-Beating.

The following complaints have been referred to the Plainfield Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, for action:

By the Rector of The Parish—Is there a Society of Prevention of Cruelty to Children? If there is, I think they ought to be after an aged x-certain house on Chatham street last Wednesday noon, where a brutal father was beating his child—a girl—and child's mother, while, until the child pleaded for mercy, "Don't, father, don't!" and then, "Oh, mother, help!" through whipping him the child ran out in the yard crying with the pain which had been inflicted upon him. While there, the child was called for him to stop crying, which of course only increased the punishment. I was not received on certain house on Chatham street last Wednesday noon, where a brutal father was beating his child—a girl—and child's mother, while, until the child pleaded for mercy, "Don't, father, don't!" and then, "Oh, mother, help!" through whipping him the child ran out in the yard crying with the pain which had been inflicted upon him. While there, the child was called for him to stop crying, which of course only increased the punishment. I was not received, as the father called him in and gave him a still more severe whipping than the first, striking him about the head and face with a tear in their eyes, and asking hearts, while the father continued to whip the child with part of a knife, in sympathy for the child. I think such cruelty ought to be put a stop to. There are other cases which are not so much of a surprise for the children, as much as the parents' treatment towards their children, have been discussed with them. Humanity.

Thirsty for Fatherwood Springs.

Roselle can be numbered with any one of the thriving New Jersey country towns for improvements and enterprising citizens. Whenever they undertake to have improvements they succeed, as a second. Take, for example, the water question. Not over six weeks ago the matter was first spoken of, and in a few weeks a pure-est water in the country will be flowing from the great mountain springs of Fatherwood in Roselle, and from this great fresh every citizen of the village can be supplied at nominal cost.

Safe, Sure and Speedy.

No external remedy ever yet devised has so fully and unquestionably met these three prime conditions as successfully as Allcock's Porous Plasters. They are safe, sure and speedy. Unlike other plasters, drugs and gas manufactured upon solemnization are not depended upon to produce the desired effect. Allcock's Porous Plasters become nothing goes into them except ingredients which are exactly adapted to the purpose for which the plaster is designed. They are speedy in their action, because their medicinal qualities are rightful to their work of relieving pain and restoring strength, and because they are in direct contact with the seat of the trouble. Their power to relieve pain, strengthen the weak parts, and to cure, is unequaled by any other plaster. Be sure and call for ALLCOCK'S, and do not accept substitution or explanation. Insist upon it and accept a substitute.

A NEW DOUBLE TEAM RECORD.

Belle Hamlin and Globe Trot in 2:12 Under the Watchful Eye of Wesley Johnson and "Barney" Williams.

The track at Kirkwood, Del., was opened Monday. It is a time-ed that there were 12,000 persons on the grounds.

The event of the day was the success-ful effort of Belle Hamlin and Globe to break their record made on the track at Independence, Ia. The time made to-day was 2:12, one second better than the Independence time.

The three judges, Joseph W. Wenderoth, president of the Philadelphia Tattersall, and W. F. Williams and J. W. Johnson of this city, associates, recorded the time as 2:13 flat, and this stands as the record, although the watches of a number of horsemen on the judges' stand marked 2:11½ and 2:12. The best previous double team record was 2:12, made by Belle Hamlin and Justin in October, 1890, on the Independence kite track. The best previous record of Belle Hamlin and Globe was 2:13½, made on the Belmont Park, Philadelphia, elliptical track last May.

FIFTEEN YEARS FOR RANDOLPH.

The Plainfield Negro Gets Heavy Sentence for Assaulting a Little Child.

Alonzo Randolph, the negro wretch charged with assaulting little Alice Day, was sentenced to State Prison, Woodbine day, for 15 ears. When arraigned before the court for sentence the prisoner was forced to listen to a scathing denunciation of his character from prosecutor Marsh, who made a most vigorous arraignment of blackishes in his record. The negro did not quail a particle before the attack, and seemed utterly unconcerned about his fate.

Is Good If It Is to Be Repeated.

The musicale given in the First Presbyterian church on Saturday evening, Monday evening, under the auspices of the Gentlemen's club, was a grand success. Although the night was rainy, the audience was large, and everyone present was much pleased with the programme.

The piano solos rendered by Mrs F. M. Ridell of Plainfield were heard to the utmost, and were liberally applauded. Miss Maude Benton rendered a very beautiful solo entitled "Speak", which was much encored, as was also the solo entitled "Good Bye" by Miss Jessie Haynes. Mr. Kinsey also rendered two very pretty solos. The recitation entitled "Only" by Miss Jessie Agnar was well rendered, as was also the one by A. A. Lake entitled "Sand- Letter". The male quartette and Mr. Teed did nobly; each one being encored. Mr. Teed's avenue, nearly brought down the house with his whistling song. Miss Beasie Hair of Plainfield rendered "Eternal Rest" very beautifully, and Miss Hopkins sang the song effectively "The Eyes of Sunny Spain". Miss Emma Marlow sang a very pretty song entitled "Cowboy's Sweetheart", and great delight of the audience Miss Maggie Swackhamer, the accompanist, deserves honorable mention. The entertainment will be repeated in the near future.

A big day of visiting brothers and the members of Dunellen and New Market councils of Jr. O. U. A. M., started from the Dunellen station at noon of Monday and proceeded by Friendship council brass band. They paraded through the principal streets of Dunellen and by way of Prospect avenue, to New Market, where they were met by the band and escorted in with games and fireworks. A costly prize was given to each winner, but the only prize of interest carried out of this vicinity, was that of the 100 yards dash won by, Mr. Sheppard of this city. The other winners were: Bicycle race—First prize Knights of Dunellen; second prize Agnes of Dunellen. Potato race—Day of New Market. Standing high kick—Agnes of Dunellen. Plainfielders in a Chicago.

Andrew Wilson and wife are back from Asbury Park. While out driving in that place, Thursday afternoon, they had an exciting experience with a cyclone. Seeing the storm coming, Mr. Wilson drove into a barn. He was scarcely in the building when the wind carried off the roof and tore away the clapboards. The gates off and fell upon the horse, and the noise frightened the animal so that he bolted through the open side of the structure. Unfortunately, Mr. and Mrs. Wilson were able to get out of the wagon before it was upset. The horse broke loose, and the wind carried the wagon over the fence, a considerable distance from the barn. The Wilsons reached home safely, but very sore from their fight with the elements.

The Most Jaunty Gowning in Possible Favor.

A Recent Costumer Which Is as Neat as It Is Seasonable—Summer Millinery—The Russet Shoe.

The popular imitation of the Eton jacket for ladies may be classed as one of the most popular fashions of the season, and one youthful slender figure the effect is charmingly chic.

The model shown here is dark blue cloth lined with blue silk with a fine white line in it. The broad collar and sleeves are stitched upon a narrow band of white cloth at the edge. A white silk shirt waist with a frilled edge and stiffened collar is worn with this jacket and bodied in with a wide ribbon belt. If preferred, a Cossack sash may be substituted for the belt. For warmer summer wear the corselet with suspenders is very popular. This fashion is also only appropriate for slender young women. Made up in dark blue storm serge with a bell skirt and open-fronted jacket one can get plenty of variety with little cost by making up several shirt waists of gingham, wash silk and flannel for very warm days.

For dressy house wear I can recommend the novel corsage illustrated here. The model I have in mind was dark willow-green bengaline. The back is plain while the front opens with narrow revers over an under body of India silk with a large jabot at the throat. The fullness of bengaline has the edge of each bell-bordered with a passementerie of willow-green and silver, which also forms the straight collar and waistband. A full sleeve of the India silk come to the wrist in a frill.

The summer material par excellence is crepon. Every shade is represented and many of the fine embroidered canvas designs, under the auspices of the Gentlemen's club, was a grand success. Although the night was rainy, the audience was large, and everyone present was much pleased with the programme.

The piano solos rendered by Mrs F. M. Ridell of Plainfield were heard to the utmost, and were liberally applauded. Miss Maude Benton rendered a very beautiful solo entitled "Speak", which was much encored, as was also the solo entitled "Good Bye" by Miss Jessie Haynes. Mr. Kinsey also rendered two very pretty solos. The recitation entitled "Only" by Miss Jessie Agnar was well rendered, as was also the one by A. A. Lake entitled "Sand- Letter". The male quartette and Mr. Teed did nobly; each one being encored. Mr. Teed's avenue, nearly brought down the house with his whistling song. Miss Beasie Hair of Plainfield rendered "Eternal Rest" very beautifully, and Miss Hopkins sang the song effectively "The Eyes of Sunny Spain". Miss Emma Marlow sang a very pretty song entitled "Cowboy's Sweetheart", and great delight of the audience Miss Maggie Swackhamer, the accompanist, deserves honorable mention. The entertainment will be repeated in the near future.

A big day of visiting brothers and the members of Dunellen and New Market councils of Jr. O. U. A. M., started from the Dunellen station at noon of Monday proceeded by Friendship council brass band. They paraded through the principal streets of Dunellen and by way of Prospect avenue, to New Market, where they were met by the band and escorted in with games and fireworks. A costly prize was given to each winner, but the only prize of interest carried out of this vicinity, was that of the 100 yards dash won by, Mr. Sheppard of this city. The other winners were: Bicycle race—First prize Knights of Dunellen; second prize Agnes of Dunellen. Potato race—Day of New Market. Standing high kick—Agnes of Dunellen. Running high jump—Giddie of Washington. Supreme Vice-Dunellen council. A grand display of fireworks was given in the evening with music by the band.

FASHION NOTES.

Fashionable dressmakers are the direct results of the fashionable servant girl system. It has been said as often that as a nation we are a nation of imitators. Here too fast that the remark has degenerated into a mere platitude. And yet it is full of meaning. Unfortunately, it is while no one dreams for a moment that those who should heed that warning it contains are the ones to apply it to one or another of their fellow-creatures whose mode of life may justify criticism.

Although deplorable, it is nevertheless true that the servant girl system, with all its sacrifice health, enjoyment, recreation, everything essential to physical and mental well-being, has its bright sides. Even in the midst of a summer outing his thoughts are bent on moneymaking rather than on pleasure, and with the demoralizing idea that the accumulation of wealth is the principal, if not the only, aim of life.

Ours is a progressive nation, but we have not yet learned to do this with the least waste. Everything moves rapidly, speed it prodigally, but refuse to take the time necessary for the right adjustment for which we pay so dearly. Among the things we can learn from the peoples of Europe than two together without resting your eyes and closing them fully five minutes. Be most careful to live in the open air hours to bed and rise at regular hours, for did not Milton declare his blindness to proceed from the effects of midnight oil? If the eyes be weak debar them in a basin of soft water to which a pinch of table-salt and a dessertspoonful of brandy have been added.

The workhorses in Alaska.

The workhorses in Alaska are the dogs in Alaska. Three dollars a day, with board and lodging provided by his employers, are miners' wages. Indian workmen in the mines receive only 50 cents a day, and "find" themselves. The cost of provisions adds a dollar a day for each white engaged in the expenses of the mining company, and with these items in the operating expenses, any fractions of dividends will generally prove the richness of the mines. Hydraulic mining begins in May and lasts until October, and unless they are situated in snow-clocked canyons, difficult of access, the miners mills do not all the year round. The great Treadwell mill on Douglas island thunders night and day, crushing and amassing nothing out in the twelve months ending with last May $760,765.35—sufficient answer to all that is said against Alaska as being or becoming a great mining country.—Harper's Weekly.

Huge Sailing Vessel.

The sailing ship Marie Bidermen, recently launched at the Russell yards at Port Glasgow, Scotland, is claimed to be the largest sailing ship in the world. It is 375 feet long, with a breadth of beam of 45 feet, draws 25 feet of water, and her gross tonnage is 3,307 feet. She is built of steel.

BABY'S BASKET BED.

A Few Suggestions Regarding Dainty Nursery Appointments.

Now that the cradle has become a thing of the past and that rocking the baby is prohibited by both nurse and doctors, no daintier bed can be contrived than a basket for the little one to sleep in.

The basket-bed has the merit of being light, and it can be so fitted and arranged by the mothers own hands as to become a nest of the most tasteful and daintiest little autocrat.

Select a large sized rectangular willow clothes basket, with a slightly flaring sides. Have the carpenter, if you cannot do it yourself, screw fast to the bottom a piece of board, upon which can be easily attached small brass casters.

Cover the inside neatly with old pink India silk (you may use pink satin, or even pink cambric, if you choose) and make a full frill of the same to which will hang from the edge of the basket to the floor. Then over the silk arrange fine white linen or a form, inexpensive, white lawn, or the very best cambric. Squares of linen like this are sufficiently transparent to take the tint of the silk lining and all of them will darken and look even better than new.

Cut off a strip of fine white fabric long enough to reach, shall we say, partly above and partly below the line of the hem, embroider the design in long and short stitch, with feather stitch over greens. Then carefully press the work and make the strip in a plaited frill.

Line the basket over the the silk with pink cambric, or some other soft fabric, taking care that it is drawn tight and smooth. Next turn in the upper edge of the frill, to avoid fraying, and sew it to the edge of the basket with fine stitches, taking care to catch here and there.

With old pink ribbon, of the necessary width, cover the entire edge of the basket and drive through it, into each side, with an open bone, head or nail (these tacks can be easily withdrawn lastly, with narrow ribbon of the same color, which hide the tacks, finishing with small rosettes.

When all the decorative work is done, make a mattress to fit the basket, and a small, flat pillow on which to rest the tiny head. Then embroider sheets, blankets and fleecy shawls with dainty slips, with morning glories like those upon the frill. Line the spread and cover the pillow to match.

The silks as well as the linens will be very repeated cleaning and will come fresh from the laundress as good as ever.

The materials and the general directions for the work are the best that can be offered, but the color and design can, of course, be varied to suit the taste and need. The morning glory, however, will prove nearly always to be the favorite. Its delicate coloration, although the violet and the rose-bud each has a claim upon nursery consideration, is peculiarly suited to the baby's delicate complexion, and its foliage is peculiarly pure in color, perfectly symmetrical in form, and very morning of life—perhaps it is for these reasons that they are so singularly satisfactory.—Clara Dance, in St. Louis Republic.

Some Small Economies.

When you have an old dress that is shabby worn out, and the skirt lining is pretty good, rip the skirt apart and you could utilize the same in making a new dress. Many a small dress or skirt is slightly, iron it and it is all ready for the new skirt to be draped over. Many a small dress or skirt is stiff and it is as good as new. That is what I did and I will tell you what I did with it. I bought some of the cheap flannel made with a very full skirt. I first cut the best of it to make

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE STATE, THE COUNTY AND THE CITY, AND HAS THE LARGEST CIRCULATION OF ANY PAPER PUBLISHED IN THE COUNTY OF UNION.

J. A. DEMAREST - - City Editor.

THE GROWTH OF "THE PRESS".

The story of the progress and prosperity of the Plainfield people's newspaper, THE PRESS, is familiar to all, and it is unnecessary to repeat the tale of its constant successes and of its continuous growth in the affections of the public. The support given by local tradesmen has always been hearty and generous, and steadily increases, and to accommodate the continued demands on its space the paper has just had to undergo another enlargement. Each column is lengthened two inches, making a total increase of more than three columns over the old size. THE PRESS of to-day is twice as large as the infant PRESS of five years ago. It is the paper that all read, and every prosperous merchant has space in its advertising columns. That advertising generates success, the experience of PRESS advertisers effectually proves.

—The Park club has created a substantial iron fence around the entire front of the club-house grounds.

—The sale of the City Hotel property, set down to take place at Elizabeth Wednesday, has been adjourned again for one week. At the last day of sale John H. Staats bid $19,800, and the sale was adjourned with his bid the highest. Among those absent was Sheriff Smith from the sale on account of the numerous judgments.

—Monday a man by the name of McCabe struck Fred. Shaeffer as he was passing his store on Somerset street. Shaeffer walked deliberately up to Shaeffer and hit him without provocation. However, McCabe still walks the streets unmolested, while Shaeffer is suffering from a black eye and swollen face.

—In Bound Brook, as in Plainfield and North Plainfield, during all of the afternoon and evening of the Fourth, the local fire department was on the alert. Hitched to their apparatus, with men on duty, ready to start at a moment's notice. The past experience with fire in the Hartland river borough have taught the men a lesson. No blaze occurred, however.

—Just as the 3:30 train from New York was leaving Fanwood Tuesday afternoon, a rock was thrown through the front window of one of the cars and scatt-red the broken glass all over a vacant seat just between two ladies. The Fanwood police councilman Frazee, Plainfield may well be thankful that the rock did n't strike the window just before or behind where it did.

HOMEOPATHISTS AT ODDS.

Dr. Bell, Who Was Charged With Believing in the Doctrine of "Divine Healing", Succeeded by Dr. Rushmore of Plainfield.

The International Hahnemannian Association, the select organization of strictly orthodox homeopaths, has been shaken to its very foundations as a result of the annual meeting held last week at Narragansett Pier. The cause of the internal disensions was the charges preferred against Dr. James Bell, the president of the association. He was accused of advocating the theory of divine healing and of resorting to the use of the surgeon's knife in a manner not in accord with the revelations of the Deity of which he was the representative head.

The accuser was Dr. Hariyn Hitchcock of 19 Broadway.

Dr. Thomas Dillingham of 46 West 36th street was one of the principal champions of the venerable president. When seen yesterday Dr. Dillingham was very loath to speak at all about the affair. He said that the association was all right and that Dr. Bell had been overwhelmingly upheld by the action of the board of censors, of which Dr. Edward Rushmore of the board of censors, of this city, was elected to succeed Dr. Bell.

Dr. Dillingham admitted that the members were very much angered by the publicity which had been given to the family quarrel. They proposed to sustain Dr. Bell, he said, and there were but about five members of the entire 200 who were inimical to Dr. Bell's interest. The friends of the president were in favor of expelling those members, but were restrained by the wishes of Dr. Bell himself.

Mr. Brisco Pays the Mortgage.

(From the Rev. Mr. Mitchell's Pastor.)

A most important step has been taken by the officers of our church in regard to Monroe Avenue chapel. James McBride agrees to pay off the mortgage of $2,500 on the property, and just as soon as it is considered advisable, in the name of the Methodist Episcopal church will be organized in the chapel, a board of trustees constituted, and the property loaned to that board for a term nominal and free. So soon as it appears that it is wise to make a complete transfer of the property to the Monroe Avenue society the church trustees will do so. In the meantime, the property is not to be encumbered by debt. Mr. McGee will have placed in the chapel a memorial tablet in memory of his wife, with her husband, was also much interested in the success of the chapel. The official board has most heartily expressed its high appreciation of Mr. McGee's liberality in connection with Monroe Avenue chapel, and all unite in prayer for the highest success of the enterprise. The outlook is hopeful for a strong young society at Monroe Avenue in the near future.

Still a Chance to Help the Needy.

The Plainfield Relief Association, to its friends about to leave home for a summer outing: Do not forget that our funds have been exhausted by the work of the winter, while a number of persons—because of sickness or misfortune—will continue to require the help of the association during the summer. Donations in cash or by check will be thankfully acknowledged by the treasurer,

An Officer Assaulted at a Picnic.

Special officer Jacob Krimey was on duty under Capt. Grant's orders at an Evans picnic Monday. In the evening, he says, a mob of drunken toughs assaulted him. He laid one fellow out with his club, and paralyzed the others. He will have his assailants arrested. The officer seems plucky and cool-headed in the hour of danger, and the authority able to handle himself when attacked.

Rushed Sanctum at Evans.

Two masked men tried twice to enter Ed. Vail's house at Evans, after midnight Sunday. At 2 a. m., special officer Jacob Krimey sauntered along. An hour later they were again prowling around, and Ed Vail fired a pistol at them. The suspicions characters had been in the neighborhood some time. They have now disappeared.

TO UNION COUNTY FARMERS.

Exhibits Wanted for the Great World's Fair at Chicago.

President Dennis Long, of the Union County Board of Agriculture, has issued an informal notice to the farmers of Union county, to the effect that exhibits of agricultural products are wanted, to represent the different counties of New Jersey at the great Chicago exhibition. Superintendent Thomas, of the New Jersey State Board of Agriculture, has been placed in charge of the New Jersey agricultural exhibit, and it is from him that president Long has received notice with reference to the Union county exhibit.

What is wanted is an exhibit of the grasses, grains and vegetables grown in this county. The roots, straw, heads, and in short the plant complete, is what is wanted. Pick out the tallest, best specimens, the stem in some instances some five or six inches in diameter, and send them to president Long, who will see that they are forwarded to the proper parties.

Very fine specimens of hay, grain, corn, rye, etc., doubtless will be made, and Union county may take very high rank in the exhibition of these products.

Freight Cars Derailed.

The furious thunder storm of Friday afternoon caused almost a serious accident on the delivery tracks of the Central of New Jersey station. The rain fell in sheets, drenching everything thoroughly, and the track rails and car wheels became so slippery that a number of coal cars standing on an inclined trestle at Loomis & Rice's started to slide down the grade. The end car slid to the switch and projected over the main track just as an eastbound freight train came along. The engine of the freight train collided with the car and derailed it and the other cars back of it. No serious damage was done, but had the freight train been delayed until the cars were fairly across the track the consequences must have been disastrous.

AT FAIR NETHERWOOD.

The Hotel's Season Opens Next Augustus, It—A Lot of Its Guests.

[SPECIAL TO THE PRESS.]

FAIRNETHERWOOD, June 30.—The season of the spring is fully inaugurated at this well-known and popular summer resort in the heights of fair Netherwood. There are already a large number of guests sojourning here from New York, Brooklyn and other points, and everyone seems fully satisfied with the excellent management of proprietor Miller, who is untiring in his efforts to please his patrons. One among the charming features of this Arcadia on the Heights is the low commercial rating assigned to the dwellers therein. Every department of The Netherwood is well officered and under the personal supervision of proprietor Miller. It is safe to assume that the patrons of this fair resort will be properly cared for at their home in picturesque Jersey. The excellent railway service over the Central and the frequency of trains to and from New York are too well known to need further comment from your correspondent—but the fine roadways and beautiful drives throughout the country. Many elegant turnouts may be seen daily issuing from The Netherwood.

Proprietor Miller bulletined the following notice in the hotel yesterday: "The guests of the hotel and their friends are cordially invited to attend a grand hop on the evening of July 4." It is quite safe to predict a brilliant and enjoyable event.

From present indications and the booking, the season of '92 compares favorably with former seasons. Greenop's excellent orchestra is again with us, and its charming selections receive warm commendation from the visitors, and especially the votaries of terpsichore. A large coaching party from New Brunswick dined at the hotel on Tuesday evening last and expressed their pleasure thereof.

The first event of general pleasure and universal gratification at the hotel this season, was the singing last evening of Miss Lizzie Conway, one of the most admired of the guests. She has an unusually sweetly pure, rich mezzo voice that has even improved in method and expression since last year when THE PRESS had the honor of hearing and praising it. She sang a number of selections equally well although so varied as to require remarkable range.

The guests at present at the Hotel are:

From New York city—H. J. Weber, Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Rogers, Mr. and Mrs. F. M. Foster, Mr. and Mrs. R. E. Bowne, Miss Jennie Baney and maid. Mrs. A. J. Ferry, T. L. HOT COFFEE FOR THE FIREMEN.

Plainfield to Have Coffee and Ice Planted and in a Worthy Enterprise.

To the Home-Owners of this City and Borough.

GENTLEMEN AND FRIENDS:—The coffee cart scheme as presented by the Woman's Christian Temperance union to the Plainfield Reform club, our said society have been requested by the executive committee to assume the responsibility of its control and maintenance.

Believing most thoroughly in the practical benefits of such service, we are also ready to assume the responsibility provided the citizens will guarantee us an annual income sufficient to cover all contingencies.

Contributions from fifty cents to five dollars will be gladly received by any of the officers, the appointed collectors, or at my residence.

The accompanying letter from the chief of our fire department, T. O. Doane, commends itself to most favorable consideration. Its statements of fact are believed to be estimated without any reliable data, will not be less than $10 for each fire of sufficient magnitude to call out more than thirty-seven fires said alarms. Wages must be good, as well as all the materials; and economy is not the question in face of the fact that our firemen are so zealous and faithful, serving at all seasons without salary or reward. Surely they deserve the best, and should be assured that this service can be relied upon at night and in storm.

The cart is now in the Salvation Army hall free of any charge for storage, but we should be a sudden loss to them to have it longer on the evening of July 4." It is quite safe to predict a brilliant and enjoyable event.

Yours respectfully,

MRS. GEORGE F. OPDYKE,
President.

16 West Eighth street.

CITY OF PLAINFIELD, N. J., OFFICE OF THE CHIEF ENGINEER OF THE
FIRE DEPARTMENT,
June 23, 1892.

Mrs. Opdyke:

DEAR MADAM:—Your favor calling attention to the wish of the Woman's Temperance Aid society, to place the coffee cart at the disposal of the Fire department, is received; and on behalf of the department members I thank you for your generosity, and I will heartily cooperate with you in your efforts to utilize the cart in the best way possible. You ask, Can men work on water alone? In answer to this, I will say, No. Neither can they work well with liquor and beer. The best drink in my opinion for men who are working at a fire is coffee.

Nothing can take the place of good hot coffee on such occasions. There is not only no danger of the men becoming intoxicated, but also no possible danger of taking cold from wet feet and the like exercise. We will be very happy to have the coffee at all times you may see fit to furnish it. Thanking you very heartily for the interest you take in the welfare of the fire department members, I am,

Yours respectfully,

T. O. DOANE, Chief.

THE PEOPLE TO DECIDE.

Railway Rivalry in North Plainfield to be Settled by a Public Meeting.

The Mayor and street committee of the borough met Thursday in conference with the contractor Theodore Norris, Jr., one of the president, Dr. J. T. Fritts, one of the incorporators, and other representatives of the North Plainfield railway company. The borough officials listened to the company's proposition to extend the trolley line into the borough. Now they will give a public hearing to the company in which Dr. J. H. Cooley is interested, and will then call a meeting of the citizens and property-owners to discuss the various propositions. The Mayor and his co-workers are determined to have only that railway system which the people want, and are desirous of having the public make its own decision.

The Mayor has received from the Jarvis Air Motor company a proposition now under consideration. The company will run its cars free of charge on trial, over any tracks that may be laid, the company laying the tracks by the cars if the trial is satisfactory. The Jarvis people claim to be able to run one mile per hour at the laying of tracks to give an exhibition of its system on.

FANWOOD'S FIRE-BUG.

Citizens Openly Charge a Well-known Resident with Crime.

August Scheitner, who was so badly burned in a stable fire at Fanwood Friday night, has died of his fearful injuries, at Muhlenberg Hospital. His funeral took place in Scotch Plains this afternoon.

The origin of the fire in the village Monday caused much excitement among the Scotch Plains and Fanwood people.

The fire started on the place of Charles Richardson, and started in his house. The local department battled nobly, and extinguished the blaze. The damage was about $500. The singular coincidences of these fires on Mr. Richardson's property have aroused the suspicion of the public, and to-day charges of incendiarism are openly directed against a well-known citizen who is suspected and threatened with arrest. Numbers of people are eager for the prosecution, but are waiting for the Grand Jury to meet, and take the initiative. An investigation is being made. The suspected person stoutly protests his innocence, and defies anyone to bring proof of his guilt.

The Jersey Central's Early Trains.

The Philadelphia and Reading railroad, New Jersey Central and Port Reading railroad companies, in their answers in the suit brought against them in the name of the people by Attorney-General Stockton, defend their consolidation of interests and deny the charge that one of its main objects is to monopolize the coal supply. They aver that the roads of the several corporations owns coal lands or mines, or sells coal, and that they have no power to fix or increase the price of anthracite coal or create a monopoly in the business of mining and selling it. All that they could do to influence the price, they say, would be to change their tolls for carrying coal. These tolls are not being increased since the lessee went into effect. If the wholesale or retail price of coal go up, the combined railroads assert it will be brought no act of theirs. Standing on the privileges conveyed by their charters, they assert that in the issues they have in no way transcended their rights as railroad corporations.

Farewell Reception for Cleveland.

Notwithstanding the lateness of the evening, a large and enthusiastic party of Democrats met at the Fanwood clubhouse Friday night and organized a campaign party, with the following officers:

President—George C. Ritter.
Secretary—Howard A. Tyrer.
Treasurer—Frank R. Anderson.

Excellent music was delivered, and much enthusiasm was manifested. When the meeting adjourned it was with cheers for Cleveland and Stevenson.

FIVE MEN IN A BOAT.

Alarming Adventure of Plainfield Fishermen on a Trolling Trip in a Cyclone.

John Beerbower, Charles H. Lyman, Noel Verrier and C. B. VanWinkle drove Thursday morning to the Central depot, in the latter's carriage, bound for Plainfield. After a pleasant and copious breakfast at the home of Mrs. Beerbower, aunt of Col. C. H. Moore of Somerset street, they took a trolley to the point of Mr. Beerbower, for a fishing trip. After loading the yacht with the necessary refreshments for a day's outing on the water, and also enough bait to catch all the fish in the Bay, the party started on their journey.

The first portion of the trip was a very enjoyable one. After a short stop on the Staten Island shore, the yacht was put off from shore and started across Raritan Bay. Though a very strong breeze was blowing, the yacht ran along nicely, and Mr. Beerbower, and landed the occupants at Keyport, N. J., all greatly disgusted over their failure to tempt the finny tribe, but all were determined themselves to contribute to the safe arrival of the yacht, having helped the captain by substituting ballast for fish.

After a very pleasant stop at Keyport, the party started on their return voyage. About ten minutes from shore a very heavy storm arose. Bobby, being unable to hold both the jib boom and the rudder at the same time, gave the jib boom to Beerbower to take care of. Boblike, Bobby very kindly turned the yacht, executing it over the snapper-holes. Beerbower, instead of letting the jib boom take advantage of the new insertion of Mr. Buckley, and held fast to it, and consequently the yacht went plunging and thrashing about in the water. Mr. Beerbower realized the danger, and by masterly manipulation of the rudder succeeded in heading the yacht to the shore, arriving just in time, for the heavy storm struck, and a cyclone raged.

After the storm had abated, Mr. Buckley, finding the breeze all in his favor, made preparations for the return trip. The mainsail was hoisted, the yacht set on the pier in deep meditation, and came to the conclusion that it would be safer not to leave term from again, but to remain where it was for the season. They therefore abandoned the yacht, after having witnessed almost the drowning of Beerbower, who, while boarding the yacht, missed his footing and floundered about in deep water. After the drenched and dripping Beerbower had been rescued, the three sailed for home.

The remainder of the trip was uneventful. The frightened party met the Inspired mariners at Sewaren, and all drove safely back to Plainfield, congratulating one another that they were alive.

A Fourth-of-July Sermon.

The hours from midnight July 3 to 7 a. m. July 4 were altogether too noisy for comfort in Plainfield. It is nonsense and folly to permit youngsters to pop off at 2 or 3 in the morning, even on Independence Day, and make the night hideous with their rackets. The sentiment of celebration is one thing, but to keep people of the rest that is due them at night. Parents and children have a duty to the community, and it is the parents' duty to prohibit the youngsters from making a nuisance of themselves. Seven in the morning is early enough to begin the noisy work of the Fourth. Holidays are made to give rest to tired nerves, but the Fourth just past made many people wretched. The thoughtless ones should recollect that there are many people whose organizations are extremely sensitive, and to them all-night explosions give a serious shock. To many fair women the Fourth of July is a day of really terrible experiences. They suffered greatly from the violence of the night disturbances, and not a few were made nervous wrecks and brought to the verge of nervous prostration by the sleeplessness and shock. A fine old lady who is confined a helpless invalid to the house had to be moved from the front to the rear, in dread of the tumult of the night preceding the Fourth. Her neighbors knew this, but instead of restraining their noise and keeping their racket and confusion within daylight bounds they permitted the boys to do as they pleased, and as a result pandemonium reigned in front of the poor invalid's residence from midnight to breakfast time. Children should be taught that the day is long enough for their fun. When they start in so early they burn up all their powder before noon, and the quiet that ought to have obtained during the night falls on the afternoon instead. The prohibition of disorderly conduct from 12 midnight to 7 a. m. ought to be a matter of neighborly kindliness, not of municipal legislation, yet it looks as though the passage of an ordinance alone would quell the disturbances. To annoy the public and to deprive of sleep those needing rest is not the true spirit of the Fourth. Patriotism does not consist of making one's self a nuisance. It is a good thing to keep the young people from patriotism, and it is a good thing to instill into their hearts the humanity of the Golden Rule. When the sick and the weary want rest, it is cruel and barbarous to deprive them of it. The true gentleman is ever considerate of the comfort of others. The true patriot is brave and steady enough to forego a few of the pleasures to gratify his fellow men and women. True gentleman is true patriot; and he is neither who is disloyal to the American and Christian duties of sufferings is thousand times rather than incict it once, or who wilfully trespasses on the rights of his fellow-citizens. To be good and brave to be chivalrous, to be sensitive to the wants of more delicate organizations; it is better to suffer than wring for the pleasure of others is the noblest jewel than the coronets of kings.

Active Democrats Democrats.

The executive committee of the North Plainfield Democratic association at a recent meeting secured a permanent headquarters for the association's use, at 95 Somerset street, where meetings will be held weekly during the campaign, and which will serve as a meeting-place for the regular Democratic association hereafter. The growth of the association has been phenomenal, and it has now a most permanent place for meetings, and as this difficulty has now been overcome the organization expects to grow rapidly. The first meeting of the association will be held at the new hall this week Thursday evening. Prominent local speakers will be present, and a formal ratification of the national ticket and platform will take place. Campaign literature in abundance will be provided, and the headquarters will be open every day and evening.

A Century Run by Way of Plainfield.

At the last meeting of the Metropolitan Association of Cycling clubs all arrangements were completed for the century run to Princeton, July 23. The start will be made at 4 a. m. from the Continental hotel, Newark. The route will be as follows: Newark by way of Orange and Millburn to Plainfield, thence to Plainfield to New Brunswick by way of Franklin Park to Princeton. At Princeton the wheelmen will stop at Prince-ville and Belle Meade to Bordentown, 15 miles; Somerville by way of Bound Brook to Plainfield, 15 miles; Plainfield by way of Scotch Plains and Fanwood to Elizabeth Park, 19 miles, making a full century. Entries close July 16 with J. J. Woods, 217 West Forty-sixth street, New York.

HIS LIFE FOR A HORSE.

A FAITHFUL COACHMAN HORRIBLY BURNED IN THE SERVICE OF HIS MASTER.

The Disastrous Fire at Scotch Plains—August Scheitner Rushes Into the Flames to Save a Carriage Horse—Overpowered by the Heat and Smoke—Heroic Action of a Servant Girl.

(From The Press of July 5.)

August Scheitner risked his life for a horse, in a fierce fire at Scotch Plains, last night, and now lies in Muhlenberg Hospital this morning in a dying condition.

The fire in which Scheitner was so terribly injured was one of two disastrous conflagrations that raged in Scotch Plains this morning at midnight.

At five minutes past 12 flames were seen issuing from the barn of Charles Richardson, whose house at Fanwood was burned to the ground a few months ago. The building was all in flames when the fire department of Scotch Plains and Fanwood reached it, and despite their strenuous efforts it was burned to the ground, with all the contents. Eight fine live stock, which was rescued. The cause of this fire is unknown.

August Scheitner was coachman for Samuel Britain, the noted lawyer, who occupies the John Cook estate. Scheitner slept in an apartment over the British stable. The glare of the Richardson fire awoke him in his room, and rushing to the window he saw that the stable was all in flames. Springing from his bed, he dressed hurriedly, and was about to leave for the scene of the fire when he accidentally overturned a lighted kerosene lamp. The lamp broke, and the burning oil ran about the floor, and in an instant the entire interior of the stable was either leaped from a wi dow to the ground, and turned his attention towards rescuing the live stock. He succeeded in saving all except one horse, and his life during in behalf of that animal cost him his life.

The piteous cries of the horse were heartrending, and he ventured into the burning flames to save the poor dumb creature. The heat became so intense, and the flames raged so furiously, that he had to retreat and abandon the creature to its fate.

Overpowered by the smoke and heat, he fell prostrate on the floor. A domestic employed by Mr. Britain, noticing what was going on, rushed to the rescue, and succeeded in dragging the unconscious body away. She was in immediate peril of her own destruction, and her arms and face were severely scorched, but she escaped serious injury, and was able to assist in the efforts to revive the unconscious Scheitner.

Dr. Westcott was promptly summoned, and did what he could for the sufferer, but said the unfortunate man could not survive his terrible injuries. Scheitner's head was burned almost beyond the semblance of a human head, and the mane of charred flesh was conveyed to Muhlenberg Hospital and laid out on one of the cots there. The man suffered untold agonies during the night, but was unconscious most of the time. Scarce an inch of his body but is horribly burnt or blistered. His condition to-day is critical, and his death is nearly expected.

At 2:30 this afternoon Scheitner was still alive.

The light of the fires as seen in this city caused alarms to be sounded in both Plainfield and North Plainfield, and the departments started out, but turned back after finding the fires were far beyond the limits.

The British barn and stable was destroyed.

Sportsmen Have a Jolly Time.

The sixth monthly shoot of the New Jersey Trap Shooters' league, held on the grounds of the Independent Gun club in Ryle's grove, Newark, on Tuesday, May, was a very enjoyable affair, the management of which reflected creditably up on the trustees of the home club. The shooting set up at 9:30 a. m. was very pleasant. At that hour a heavy shower came up, which drove the shooters under shelter for half an hour. After the shower, there was no interference with the fun.

The team shoot for the championship of New Jersey called out nine teams of five men each, and each man shot at twenty-five artificial targets. This was under the direct management of Secretary Sar and W. H. Hobart, manager and secretary respectively of the league. C. H. Townsend, trap editor of Forest and Stream, and one of the organizers of the league, was official scorer. The team of the Independent Gun club of Plainfield, which had won four out of the five previous contests, took first honors, with Newark and South Side and Maplewoods being a good second. The Independents scored as follows: C. Smith, 24; Thomas Brassington, 23; Soper, 23; Apgar, 23; Miller, 20. Total—113.

The other teams scored thus: South Side Gun club of Newark, 108; Maplewood Gun club of Maplewood, 104; Orange Jersey Shooting club of Clarem-t, 96; East Side Mutual Gun club of Newark, 94; Bloomfield Spring Park and Gun club of Rutherford, 92; Passaic City Rod and Gun club of Passaic, 93; East Orange Gun club, 79; Brunswick Gun club of New Brunswick, 64.

While the team shoot was going on on one set of traps another set was utilized for the shooting of events in a regular tournament arranged for the occasion. These being managed by those well-known shooters, "Tee Kay" Keller and "Dutchy" Smith. Prominent among the winners were the Plainfield sportsmen.

The sportsmen were very hospitably treated by C. Smith, who managed the affair, assisted by his estimable wife. The refreshments they provided were greatly appreciated.

The next shoot will be at Claremont.

LOUDON THE HORSE.

His Owner Tells How He Cleared $54,000 in One Race.

A Disappointment in His Early Career—Knocked Down for Less Than $500—At Last a Jersey Stake on Coney Island.

[COPYRIGHT, 1892.]

The Story of Richard Loudon, Written by Himself.

The story that I am now to relate is about Richard Loudon, a horse; also about myself, Richard Loudon, the man. Not that I combined the attributes of a biped and quadruped, centaur-like, but there were in reality two distinct individualities, Richard Loudon, the horse, and Richard Loudon, the man, otherwise the humble narrator.

From the very first that I can remember of my boyhood I always had a passionate fondness for the high-mettled thoroughbred. Not your cold-blooded, prosaic, slow-go of the farm, but the fiery, almost unbroken descendants of Diomed, Hiarchy, Boston, Lexington and the other famous progenitors of our American racing families. I was never so happy as from the time I was deemed equal to the task of throwing a leg over a frisky yearling or a bolting two-year-old and shooting the former into the air he or she should go in track gallop and track trials. Did I get tumbled? Yes, many a time.

My uncle was a Kentucky stock-breeder, and I, as he had a son, was early reared in a modest way. But the first real good one he ever owned was Lida Stanton, by Wanrer, out of Ada Stanton.

A year worked wonderful development in the filly. Uncle Jacob named her Lida Stanton, and later on ran her with great success all over the country.

So as I attained my twentieth I began to thought me that I, a green country lad, would keep a watchful lookout for some such bargain as Lida Stanton. I saw by my uncle's great mare had proved to be, and made a stake for herself. The opportunity came sooner than I looked for.

One of the neighboring Endorf stud farm horses was to be sold at the spring sale of yearling, at which some great bargains were often obtained, after the equine rivals, in the early training of their relationship to winners, had been knocked down to millionaires or their representatives.

Among the lot to be sold the spring which proved an auspicious one to me was a bay colt by Lawyer, out of Gypsy. As the sire was a son of Lexington and the great mare Levity, and the dam by that famous old sportsman, the Irish Birdcatcher, Knight of St. George, I was prepared to see the colt fetch a high price. But perhaps because he was a bit backward and had just a bit the suspicion of an "osselet" on his off hind leg I got him dirt cheap for something under a bought of hundred dollars.

I never shall forget my feelings as the auctioneer, Col. Brewster, after knocking the colt down, gave my name and address" and I proudly answered him: "Dick Loudon, sir," and pulled out my slender bank roll, for the young lawyer on the spot, and led him away amid the approving nods of many of my seniors in the business.

Well, for a long time I thought that I was badly "stuck" in the Lawyer colt. After I had him in training, and put him to galloping a bit, the fall after he became my property he developed a propensity for bolting shortly after I put him his legs and me my neck. One day when I was riding him myself, trying to teach him to "break" from a "strung up," he broke with a vengeance. Like a shot out of a gun, he ran a couple of hundred yards, and then, spying a break in the fence, made for it. Essaying to go over, he only succeeded in "straddling" the obstacle, after dumping me on the other side on my head. When I was picked up from the pile of manure there was my world beater thrashing away for dear life among the reins, and I dazed from after my uncle, Richard Loudon. As I was also shaked after my uncle, there were then three Richard Loudons in the field, Richard Loudon, London the horse. Which of the trio did the most service to the house of Loudon in the matter of covering the name I am about to relate I will leave to onlookers, however, to judge.

The colt, after a season of resting up there a bit, I shipped the horses direct to Saratoga, via the Chesapeake & Ohio and Southern railroads, to New York, and I arrived with my small string of three in good shape at the Springs for a spring trip.

As it was some weeks yet before racing began at the springs, I had little trouble in getting my string into the Horse Haven, and, after a confab with Secretary Walley of the association, selected one of the stalls that had been had the old grandstand in the famous pine grove. Here I had the three-quarter-mile sandy track to gallop my horses on, as well as the regular course just across the avenue.

My life at Saratoga during these preliminary weeks was very pleasant. The surroundings were new and pleasant and atmosphere of Horse Haven did wonders for my horses as well as for myself, and by the time the last week of July arrived my little party was in good shape for business. An interested spectator of my horses' progress during these preliminary workings was Secretary Walley, the Board of Associated Horse racing officials. Partly was this due to a natural sentiment on his part, as he had himself owned a horse or two of my colt Richard Loudon, and afterward sold her to the Endorf farm stud. Prior to finding my colt, Spiritual Dream, that good race mare Peruvian to the English horse Glengar, and her breeder was naturally interested in the new Lawyer colt, as exemplified by my colors, which I had to admit were by no means to feel ashamed of the result of the union, judged by subsequent performances.

Well, till Saratoga meeting that summer was in progress I had no thought of entering of the best of the horses from the western meetings with those from east and had interrupted trades promised some exciting sport.

Among the acquaintances I had formed at Saratoga was a young man who had enjoyed a phenomenal run of luck in the racing seasons. From an employe at the race track there, James McDonough had progressed, with the aid of a fancy $1,000 winning on a combination bet, to the ownership of a few horses and a fair amount of cash as well. This latter I had helped him to increase by a hint from me to back my colt in his 10-to-1 at Saratoga, and he looked to me to be the man I wanted for my partner.

He was not at the track that day, so I went up to the city in the evening and found my man at his hotel. He was most enthusiastic over the scheme, and offered to advance the whole amount of the money, and if we lost I could repay him my half when convenient. This was better than I had expected, for the money I intended to put in would, if lost, make a pretty serious hole in it.

So McDonough agreed to be on hand at the Bay the second day after with $2,000 in cash to put on my colt. I had also arranged, with two friends in whom I had implicit confidence to assist in "plunging" on the event. This did not them it was to go on my colt until the last moment.

The eventful day broke clear and pleasant. A typical September afternoon brought down great crowds to the track, boats, trains and roads being crowded by expectant racegoers. Our race was the first on the programme so our little party of four were on hand early, having some important business in view.

There were ten 3-year-olds in the race, including Woodbrook, whose performances had caused him to be made a hot favorite; Shannon, the California crack; Tattle, the pride of the Chesapeake; Brighton; Hunter Pope, West Virginia, Leonine and Stoner from the stables of two of our millionaire turfmen, and three others beside my gelding.

The betting opened at 10 to 1 in the betting ring, and my friends wanted to jump in, but I said: "No, wait awhile, he will go higher," and as the money came rushing in on Woodbrook, the favorite, "20 to 1 Richard Loudon" was soon heard in merry refrain amid the babel of sounds that echoed through the famous betting ring at the Bay that eventful September afternoon.

Now was our time, and each of us, after taking opposite ends of the ballroom square of bookmakers, started about down the line to put on the money. My wife was among the mutual horses, and as I passed them I purchased twenty tickets on the horse, an investment of a hundred dollars. Then I went down the bookmaking line the first stand I came to was that of Wheeler, the well successful western peculier who was backed up by the California capital of Harry Bodine.

He had 30 to 1 up against my colt. I bet him a hundred at that price and kept right on, the bookie hastily calling after me: "Say, Dick, do you want any more?" I quickly answered: "Yes, I'll give you another hundred," and like a flash, Wheeler answered: "All right, any more?" Now his bailiage seemed to rush but ten on my colt, and more, and I would have gone on, but he weakened amidst the laughter of the interest spectators of the encounter.

However, I was more than pleased, as I had got $600 on against $15,000, and the next bookmaker I struck only got only 25 to 1 up. I hit him a couple of hundred, and was passing on when the bookie called out: "Say, Loudon and on each side of the ring: "Take Baylor off of Richard Loudon," and for a moment I misdoubted my ears. Baylor, Shannon's jockey, was to ride the favorite, and I knew I had been "done" by an offer to the jockey from the owner of Woodbrook of more money to ride his colt.

Almost on a run, for the second bell had sounded, and I had to strike off a jockey or scratch, I reached the paddock, and, as good luck would have it, Baylor was not there. I had no use for his ability, but rather shady reputation. But it was he or scratch, and, promising the boy a hundred more as I had not off the Canadian swamp, I got him the colon and saw him weighed.

Then we four friends held a consultation. We found that outside of my twenty mutuals we had invested about $1,000 more, and that the odds on the respective winnings were something over 5 to 1. My partner wanted to go ahead and place that $2,000 on the race as we still 18 to 1 to be had against the colt, in spite of the money we had got on.

But I, much disturbed by the rascally trick played me by Baylor, the jockey, determined to have another rider, and substituted Jockey Cadell, although I knew my colt was an easy one to ride. So I left Baylor to Mollie Shandon, and put more it you like, but I'm only in with what it already up." So we stood by and watched the horses go to the post, and never went near the ring again, viewing the race from the paddock.

At the post just above the paddock, the field of ten horses was marshaled, and the usual collection of trainers, owners, touts and stable hands had also collected inside the infield to see the send off.

My gray-haired starter, since celebrated as the foremost wielder of the flag in this country and perhaps the world, had considerable trouble with his field. The jockeys were, if anything, more excited than the horses, and while Shandon, the Pacific coaster, hung back in the rear of the bunch, Woodbrook and his jockey, Baylor, strove in every break to "beat the flag," or, in plainer terms, to get the best of the start from the starter at once.

Fortunately for us our colt had got away in the front rank, and making the turn for the home stretch Baylor was seen to shute then as now—Vintner, ridden by the famous Jockey McLaren, was piloted by the colt owned by Richard Croker, who had Tattle at his girth. The others were well benched at their heels, all but the Seventh, Woodbrook, who by over fifty yards behind the rearguard almost hidden in the dust that blew from the flying hoofs as the race from a battlefield.

But the real struggle was only just begun, for furious was covered and they are on the straight work of the homestretch, Vintner, Richard and Tattle now on nearly even terms. I looked at my watch and as the quarter clicked I exclaimed to Mollie Shandon: "If they are not setting a very strong pace, and if they keep that up Richard will outfinish them sure in the last quarter."

The run to the last furlong, time for the three-quarters, showed Vintner lost in the shuffle and Richard between the four, and just as the people in the grandstand began to rise and recognized would have been for us to discover that he had got away from the pack. But he was not long in the difference in the world, and if he had landed a winner for his backers he could not have done it more handily.

In the race well in that hand to the last furlong in the home stretch.

Leaving McDonough to attend to the collection of the money, and my lack of nerve in not betting the rest of our money, I hurried down to the stable to see that my colt was rubbed to weigh, and few of the many that later crowded round Richard in the paddock had more than a passing word for me.

True, I had not landed the big stake laid out originally, but myself and partner had cleared over $54,000 on the two-mile, a neat day's work for any pair of turfmen. It seems that the original bookmaker with whom I had bet had changed, had been increased by another $15,000 in this way. During the day McDonough had slipped a $1,000 bill in the hands of one of our bookmaker acquaintances to get it on at the best possible price.

This money averaged 19 to 1, and though I had specially declared myself as only with the original investments, McDonough would not listen to any protests, and lumped the whole of the transactions. This made our total winnings about $54,000 on an investment of about $6,000. Had we placed the other $7,000 as originally intended the coup would have been the most brilliant one in the betting history of that day, or any other.

As for the Jockey, Baylor, this race marked his downfall, for he began to drink, and the last I heard of him he was somewhere across the border on the verge of being carted off to an intebriate asylum.

THE MAN OF FASHION.

How He Will Revel in Pyrotechnics on the Glorious Fourth.

Many Fine Displays in and About New York — A Great Train to Susie Anna — Pyrotechnic Display at Idlewild.

[COPYRIGHT, 1892.]

When the Vanderbilts went into mourning for the popular Duke of Connellsaus, an order for $5,000 worth of fireworks was canceled. It was intended to make a grand display in the Newport home of William K., but all this has been deferred, and that bright summer resort will have to look to other awards for its pyrotechnics.

But in the Columbian year the man of fashion is going to make things noisy on the day and the night of the Fourth. I was given a glance at the order book of probably the largest fireworks manufacturer in the world, and

WHAT FRANK ERETT WILL DISPLAY.

I felt a strong inclination to go up in a balloon to witness the magnificent pyrotechnic display to illuminate New York suburban homes.

At Frank Ehrets place on the Hudson an exceedingly fine display is scheduled. I was shown the rough sketch of one of the large pieces, a Gambrinus eight feet in size in the form of a beer keg, with an effect of twenty by twenty. Gambrinus is depicted sitting on a throne, from which sprays a great rush of foam-colored light, while in his outstretched hand rests a glass of foaming colored fire, which is the life-like that Mr. Ehret's friends will probably call "the blow of the foam" when the thing gets to sizzling.

While at the manufacturer's I was given some interesting pieces not yet alone the latest in the way of fireworks, but on how to arrange for fine pyrotechnic effects. The pyrotechnic scene for this season will undoubtedly be the Japanese day fireworks. Last year the Japs had a fine display, and this year they will be American. The little top-shaped bombs are fired from mortars, set upright and, exploding at a great altitude, will display lifesize figures of the presidential candidates, figures of all kinds and colors, and designs appropriate to this quadri-centennial year. The bombs are made in sizes of nine, twelve and eighteen inches in circumference. I was told that the secret of their manufacture has never been betrayed by the Japanese, and that Mr. Hamilton Fish's order for the bombs were sent to Japan and re-drawn there. They will be exploded on every night from Tuesday to the Thousand Islands, and from Bar Harbor to Coronado Beach, on the Pacific coast.

Then there is an order for Irrington which will cost either George Edwin or Jay Gould a great deal of money for a display which he intends to give. One represents Mr. Gould's special train spouting out every line of its magnificent equipment in a cloud of white smoke from the engine. The size of the frame for the locomotive is 10 by 20, for the tender 10 by 10 and for the passenger car 10 by 20, producing an effect of 40 by 100 feet. That this will delight George Gould's children goes without saying. Or, if these jests seem too silly,

WILL BE SEEN AT IRVINGTON.

Gen. Horace Porter has invited a number of G. A. R. friends to his home and the display will include a series of magnificent effects in military designs. One in particular, representing the loyal legion emblem, will prove exceedingly interesting.

To arrange a fine display take plenty of room, as extensive a lawn as possible. Place your aerial fireworks in boxes in the center of the lawn covered with cloth or tarpaulin to prevent dampness or sparks from getting at them. Your set pieces should be placed around close to the side of these covered boxes and fairly well to the rear of the lawn. Don't fail to have them in a direction away from the spectators. Your bombshells must be fired a good way from the house. Your rockets should be fired in the center of the lawn and these distribute the other pieces in such a manner that they will not interfere with each other that they may not set fire to one another. In arranging the set pieces always bring pieces of interest the spectators. Colored lights, rockets, and gyrandoles should be placed in front of the display, and well away from the flashes of the bombs, so that scorer of the lawn where the horses will be seen to carry them away from the house. Never allow the fireworks to be placed behind the central set piece, and must be well fenced. Begin your pyrotechnic display with rockets, ballocon, bombshells and illuminations, then fire off your set pieces, commencing with the smallest, finishing up with the larger, varying each display with some of the set pieces of the largest size. The effect of this will be vastly enhanced by firing off a battery of a dozen guns. The aerial bouquet should be the last piece fired.

Now, one word more as to precautions. Always station your lighting torch to a stick about six feet long.

What will it cost you to make a display of this kind? Perhaps $1,000. You can spend fifty dollars and have a very neat exhibition. But for one hundred dollars you can lay in a goodly supply of smaller pieces and at least one large set piece.

One of the prettiest displays will be that of Mrs. Van Rensselaer Crugar, at idlewild. I don't think it will cost more than a hundred dollars, and it will consist, as I am told, of three set pieces, including "The Continental Minute Man," "The Washington Statue" and "A Goddess of Liberty." These are all magnificent in color effects, and will be shown to splendid advantage on the magnificent Crugar lawn.

THE CONTINENTAL SOLDIER.

When you start out to order your fireworks be sure to order everything that is pretty, and have a few of the big pieces that must not fail to get off. Bombshells in all effects, aerial bouquets, the dazzling battery, Spanish Trefoil shower, sparkling waterfall, the shield of Iris, the Polka Redowa, Chinese bellblanta, free of liberty, the fanbuoy, Peruvian Glory, Elfin Waltz, the Aurora Borealis, the Casket of Jewels, the magic wheel, the Egyptian Pyramids, the double diamond, the revolving star, the mammoth wheel, the Italian rosette, the Moorish diadem, the peacock tail, jeweled sprays, Saxon pyramids, dazzling diamonds, revolving pinwards, Chinese spouter, revolving gun, kaleidoscope, picnades, gothic cross, basket of jewels, emerald jewels and Niagara falls.

All of these are comparatively small in the setting and magnificent in the effect. The Niagara falls design is not costly, and perhaps the prettiest of minor pieces to-date.

The sunburst is on a frame, forty by sixty inches, and in effect is thirty by thirty-five feet. The "Tree of Liberty" produces a similar effect.

BARBOUR'S SUCCESSOR.

Epps Hunton Appointed Senator by the Governor of Virginia.

The governor of Virginia has appointed Epps Hunton, on which the United States senator, to succeed John S. Barbour, deceased.

Gen. Epps Hunton was a native of Fauquier county, Va., and was born on the 2d of September, 1822. He received a liberal education, studied the law and was admitted to practice at the bar in 1846. Within a year after this he was appointed commonwealth attorney for Prince William county and held the office for 15 years. He was elected to the Virginia convention of 1861 to prepare a constitution under the confederacy, and upon the passing of the first session he entered the confederate army as colonel of the Eighth regiment of Virginia infantry. He served in all the principal battles in the army of Virginia, and after the battle of Gettysburg, in which he especially distinguished himself, he was promoted to the rank of brigadier general. On the 6th of April, 1865, he was captured at the battle of Sailor's creek and imprisoned in Fort Warren until after the cessation of hostilities, being released in July of that year.

In 1879 Gen. Hunton was elected to represent his district in congress, and was reelected to the three succeeding congresses. In the Fortysixth congress Gen. Hunton was on the committees that formed the electoral commission to decide the contest for president between Samuel J. Tilden and Hayes, and was a member of the commission itself, voting steadily with the democratic members of the body. He was also a member of the committee of conference between the two parties. Since his retirement from congress Gen. Hunton has been engaged in the practice of law.

MRS. W. E. GLADSTONE.

The Accomplished Wife of England's Prime Minister.

It has been often said that the actions and capacity for hard work shown by the wife of the statesman are usually the best indication of his greatness. Judged by this standard Mrs. Gladstone is a truly great woman. Her husband's fame has been won by the power of his intellect which endures. Indeed, taking into consideration the physical charms of Mrs. Gladstone's character she is always interesting. Every sensible thing Mrs. Gladstone does is to help her wife in world of course be impossible to her, but he has on more than one occasion published it for the world to know. She has never aimed to shine in public, but has found her greatest sphere of usefulness is in the home.

Mrs. Gladstone rather despises what is conventionally known as "society," and although she is always welcomed in that charmed circle, she calmly ignores its petty rules and observances. She is not a fool to fashion, old-fashioned way, and London Space Moments says one cannot be long in her company without seeing the force of her husband, and for him alone. She is always near him, she watches his health with anxious solicitude, and she frequently spoke the literal truth when he said he could not have got through one-half of his life's work had it not been for her counsel and practical help. She is a most practical housekeeper, and one of her duties is every morning to go through the previous day's accounts.

She dresses in black always, and the widest range of her choice is confined very high in the collar and finished with a lace ruche that comes quite to the chin. Her only other relief are the lace wrist ruffles. In the library at Hawarden is to be found the room where she is surrounded by her favorite books, for Mrs. Gladstone is a great reader and a clever woman. In spite of her domestic tastes. She writes rapidly and with a quill pen—her correspondence, though of course less voluminous than her husband's, being considerable. She is a great lover of flowers and keeps many rooms in the great house of Hawarden castle delightful by means of flowers, boons and all the little accessories of comfort which her busy brain can suggest. She is very fond of the society of young people, has a party of them about her whenever she can and is delighted when she is at the head of her own dinner-table and has about her a circle of friends who know and love her and Mr. Gladstone.

BEASTS OF BURDEN.

In California Obtained On the Work of Horses.

Odd Sights to Be Seen in the Market Gardens of Alameda County—Seed Drills Drilled Through the Fields by Coolies.

An astonishing sight has been presented recently to observant travelers over the Southern Pacific road when making passing through the great market gardens near Newark, in Alameda county, and the San Francisco Chronicle, than the utilization of Chinese laborers as beasts of burden, and of their powerful volition, too.

Along the railroad near the station mentioned bands of coolies are trained to usual beasts of burden, hitch themselves up in their stead, and are by no means to be prided that "drawn driven cattle." The large seed drill somewhat resembles a plow. It has handles like that implement, and from the front of the drill extends a rope six or eight feet long. On the end of this rope is a pole about eight feet in length is tied. Two Chinamen place the pole in front of them, about the middle of their bodies, and bending to their work pull the drill about the field in response to the commands of the man at the handles.

In some cases, instead of using the pole, the rope are attached to the shoulders and the coolie beasts of burden take the ends of these lines over their shoulders and plod over the field. Backward and forward they go, just like horses, and apparently as contented with their lot.

Certainly it is by other men in the United States is such a slight to be seen, that of human beings voluntarily taking the place of work animals.

When the Mormons founded Salt Lake City and populated the country there a scene like that described in the fields was common, and even until a few years ago many an old Mormon could be seen from the cars driving a herd of his wives hitched to a plow like oxen, and like them regarding under the lash of the driver but his curses if they stopped to rest. The influx of Gentiles has, it is supposed, put an end to this inhuman treatment of the Mormons' female slaves.

CHINESE AS BEASTS OF BURDEN.

In some older countries, where the ordinary diseases are decimating cattle and animals are scarce and fodder dear, such conditions do still exist, though even there they are fast becoming rare.

The fellahs of Egypt are the only other class of degraded human beings that are forced to do the work of beasts, and the only men so employed, and they probably have the hardest time of it. In the Nile valley they drag about the primitive plow, made of two wooden sticks, one of which serves for a handle and the other is pointed down into the ground.

But in this land of plenty, where animals of all kinds are in abundance and cheap and the fodder for them can be raised at a moment's rest, it is indeed a peculiar thing for Chinese even to consider themselves cheaper than beasts and it is all the more astonishing that this should occur but a few miles from San Francisco and in a county of fertile farms and prosperous people.

It is difficult to understand by what idea of economy the Chinese see an advantage in employing themselves to work "after the manner of the beasts of the field," but it probably has its basis in the fact that they are fond of work in the field work. But there they have no farming machinery and few horses, and all the work is done by hand.

Oldest Pair of Matched Horses.

The oldest pair of matched horses in Connecticut belongs to Eli Wakelee, of Ansonia. They are 31 and 32 years old, and have been owned and used by him almost that whole seventeen years. The next oldest pair belongs to George Cox, who owns the Ravine mills in Portland. They are 30 and 30 years old. They were foaled on the Cox farm. They were broken when 3 years old, and have never been sold since. Mr. Cox, who uses them to draw grain from Middletown to his mills, estimates that during a walk will be refreshment 2 tons of it, and during the whole time he has used them he has never cared a whip on them.

Men and Ants as Builders.

The largest pyramid in Egypt is 146 feet high and 746 feet square at the base; the average height of man; whereas the nests of the termites are 1,000 times the height of the insects who construct them. Their habitations are thus twelve times higher than the largest specimen of architecture raised by human hands.

German Horseshoeing.

In Germany, the smith, when finishing a shoe, turns up the ends of the inner ends, and when the shoe is cold he taps in a screw thread and screws into the shoe, where on the horse's foot a blunt pointed stud of an inch in length; and with shoes thus fitted horses can travel securely over the slippery ice roads, and have never been known to slip, and draught horses are shod in the same way.

COLUMBIAN TOWER.

The Grand Structure Planned by Some Enterprising Chicagoans.

A Chicago firm is preparing the plans for a mammoth observation tower to be named the Columbian, which a stock company will be formed to incorporate erecting near the world's fair grounds. Including the site the total cost of construction will be about $1,000,000. By working day and night shifts the tower, it is believed, can be completed in a year.

The lever is to be constructed of steel and iron, 800 feet in diameter at the base and 720 at the cornice line. The form is to be circular and 1,492 feet high to the base of the statue of Columbus, which will be about 56 feet high, making a total height of 1,542 feet. The statue will stand on a globe or sphere some 80 feet in diameter. The central tower shaft column is 275 feet at the ground line, diminishing by slow degrees, until at 1,300 feet it will be 120 feet in diameter. Here the shaft is capped with a heavy cornice which girts the entire shaft. From this cornice springs the roof of the tower, which rises about 120 feet and is crowned with a flagstaff. The globe will be lighted at night with powerful electric lights and reflectors.

Around the central shaft of the tower will be located a series of buildings, each refined, passing around the tower at a 5 per cent grade until it reaches the height of 1,300 feet. The entire ascent of the railroad will be about seven miles to the terminus. On one of the inner circles of the central shaft, where the railroad, will be an inclined sidewalk rising the same grade as the railroad. Inside of this walk will be refreshment booths the entire distance. In the inside section of the tower will be placed elevators. Four hydraulic lifts in the corner of the grand square, seven stories in height, with a total of 2,000 horse power. Two lifts are to be built between these hotels, on the four sides of the building, will be located ballrooms, banks, restaurants, hotels, music halls, billiard halls, bowling alleys and dining halls. There will also be, in connection with the hotels, a large opera house.

Located on the roofs of these buildings and on the roofs of the hotels will be hanging gardens. Above these gardens will be two grand promenades, forming the base of the tower. And over these promenades will be four grand halls, running around the shaft of the tower. The first will be 200 feet wide and 300 feet high. The second 300 feet high and 50 feet wide. The third 400 feet high and 90 feet wide. The fourth 500 feet high and 18 feet wide. Provision for 50,000 people visiting the top of the tower in a single day will be provided.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other destructive agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."

A TRAGEDY OF THE SEA.

A Midnight Experience Off the Coast of Brazil.

The Heroic Effort of a French Convict to Escape from a Sinking Vessel and Succeed on a Mysterious Mission of War.

[COPYRIGHT, 1892.]

DUDGE ADOLPHE CAT IS GENERAL REMEMBRANCER of the United States Senate, a handsome office in the south wing of the Capitol, and one of the great war and navy department bulldogs. Gen. Remey is the officer charged with the records of the court martial trials of naval officers. He also passes upon contracts and questions of detail of a legal interest. His position is that of judge of a court of the highest appeal in the service of the navy.

"HE WAS DRAWN ON DECK."

He is a gentleman in the neighborhood of forty years of age. One day, several years ago, when I was in his office, he turned from the record of some papers on the desk before him and told me a story about himself. The story was suggested by a map of South America attached to the papers which he was examining.

Pointing to a little spot upon the map to the northeast of the coast of Brazil he said: "That is Saint Paul's Rocks. It is a French convict station. It is a barren strip of sandy desert, bare absolutely of vegetation. It is very low and is wholly unprotected from the glare of the tropical sun. Life there is one of the utmost misery. Only convicts of the most unfortunate character are sent to the island. Deserters are common. In the despair and discomfort of this hideous life the prisoners die like sheep. To be sent to Saint Paul's is almost equivalent to being sentenced to death. The sisters of charity go there and by their presence show the only spirit that animates them. They go there and share the miseries and discomforts and deaths which are common to all on the island.

"I was a prisoner on Saint Paul's for nearly a number of years ago to the fleet in the South Atlantic, and during the course of my journeys there I became familiar with Saint Paul's. One night I sat upon the deck in the company of a number of officers. We had finished dinner below. It was a soft moonlight night, with occasional sea fires of phosphorescence. The night light at times uncertain and dim. We were lazily smoking our after dinner cigars, when I heard a cry of 'Help' from the water below. followed by a splash.

"I ran immediately to the rail, as I thought it was a case of man overboard. But there was a sailor ahead of me, who lowered a rope to a man who was swimming in the water below. In a moment he was drawn upon deck, and at once he began an explanation of his appearance.

"He was a convict from the direction of the island. He had seen me flag, and he had swam out to the ship. Would I not take him aboard and enable him to escape?

"I did not listen to another word of his explanation, but at once ordered his arrest, a matter for me. The admiral of the fleet was then dining on board the vessel in which I was. I sent an officer to his cabin asking him if he could come on deck.

"I shall never forget the picture presented when the admiral appeared. He was in the full dress of his rank as the cleaner was out of sight. He was also a handsome officer with snowy white hair and short, white beard. In striking contrast was the attitude and the appearance of the prisoner. The latter was tall, gaunt and haggard. He stood dripping in his convict dress in an attitude of intense entreaty.

"The admiral said: 'Well, sir,' and then the man began to tell his story in the clear, well modulated French of an educated person. According to his story he had committed no crime. He had been scuffled for his political opinions. He had the family of a Brazilian. He had come out to the ship at great peril in the hope that he would find here friends. He sent a copy of the laws of the country the emblem of which meant liberty. Had he made his appeal in vain?

BACK TO THE ISLAND.

"The character of the man was most impressive. The admiral believed that he was listening to the words of a man of truth and honor. He was deeply moved, but his face was stern as he said: 'I am sorry, sir, but I can do nothing for you. It is not your life or mine that would be at stake. If I were to take you away I would be guilty of interfering with the police regulations of a friendly foreign nation, and that would be sufficient cause for war, in which many thousand lives would be lost. I am sorry, but you must go back.'

"The polite attitude was now one of intense dejection. He said, without further argument: 'Sir, you have just condemned me to death.'

"'How is that?' asked the admiral.

"'According to the regulations of the island, which is by military and naval law,' replied the prisoner, 'any prisoner who attempts to escape is shot. At sunrise I will be one of the cells now made. If a prisoner is found absent at that hour his absence is considered as proof of an attempt to get away.'

"Our American admiral started as if he had heard the crack of a shot.

"'My God, man,' said he, 'what thing is it now?'

"He pulled out his watch as he spoke with a nervous tremor.

"'It is only twenty minutes to nine! I will get you back.'

"Without a second's delay the admiral turned to the side of the ship opposite the island. A four bowled cutter was given in a low tone orders and was dropped. The oars were promptly manned and a boat's crew of sailors entered like monkeys. The prisoner was hidden in the bottom of the boat and within a few minutes from the time the admiral was given the boat shot out on its errand of mercy toward the island.

"A little while after the officer sent on the mission just as the boat started, as if the elements were handing a kindly hand to the prisoner, a storm broke upon the ocean. The officers who had heard the story all swarmed to the rail with their glasses. We watched the boat's progress.

"THE BOAT SHOT OUT ON ITS ERRAND OF MERCY."

officer said, with his hand at his head as an attitude of military salute.

"'This is the message of the commandant of this post. He wishes me then to report to him myself in person. You are brave and honorable men. You have attempted to do a merciful act. Last night a prisoner escaped from this island. He was seen by a sentry as he entered the water. He was seen by the sentry in the direction of your ship. We all saw that he was taken on board. Every gun in the battery on this island was brought to bear upon your ship awaiting your decision. We saw you when you let fall the boat to bring the prisoner back. We watched the boat advance to the island through our night glasses. We received the prisoner on board a post bound for Cayenne. The prisoner was shot at four o'clock this morning.'

"This terrible story, remarkable from its dramatic and pathetic qualities, made a deep impression upon my mind. Several months afterward I was a guest in the house of Miss Mary Anderson, the actress, at her home at Hampstead, near London. Miss Anderson spoke of the dramas of real life, and I told her the story which I thought I related to her Gen. Remey's story. She asked me to write it for her. I did so. She said that she had never heard a story which had so deeply moved her, and which would make such a powerful fashion such a cruelly vivid picture of unhappiness and misery.

"Two years later I met Miss Anderson in Marseilles. She was then on her way with her mother to the Riviera in search of rest and health. She said that one day in Paris she was a guest of Lord Lyons, the British Ambassador. After the dinner Miss Anderson was asked if she would recite something. She complied and recited the story of Saint Island. Miss Anderson said that she had never in her life made any dramatic elocution which had produced a greater effect. It was at a reception after the dinner that the recitation was made. The room was filled with distinguished guests. During the recitation there was an absolute silence. The broad shoulders of the actress upon the audience with a shock like a blow in the face.

Lord Lyons's son, then fifteen years of age, was present. He had inherited the literary tradition of his distinguished grandfather and father. He said he was deeply moved by the story that he took up his pen on a day or two afterward and embodied the incident in a poem. This poem has since been published in England. C. C. CRAWFORD.

MRS. C. COLUMBUS.

She Discovered Christopher and He Discovered America.

His Achievements Due to the Inspiration of His Wife—Her Jewels Put Him Up to It—How Queen Isabella Got Funds.

[COPYRIGHT, 1892.]

Since the time when "In the beginning" Eve seduced Adam to eat the apple, and thereby established the precedent that women are responsible for most of the attended distinctions either for good or evil deeds, without the aid and guidance of whom little or nothing is done by men. To Eve's bewitching smile and active ambition Adam owes his place in the garden of Eden, and it is doubtful if he by himself he would never have been known beyond the confines of Edom.

The great discoverer of the Columbian archipelago, who first established a practicable commercial route to the Indies, which was for centuries the source of untold wealth to the nations of Europe, was indebted for the achievement of a place among the world's great men to the inspiration of his wife.

Added to his personal attractions was the advantage of a place ready, which was filled by the chapel of the convent of All Saints. There the pretty Felipa de Perestrello said her prayers, and it may be recorded that her prayers were addressed occasionally from her beads to the face of the Italian stranger. He, too, perhaps, was not as absorbed in his devotions to Our Lady as a casual observer might suppose. Evidently the bright-eyed Italian Portuguese maiden won his admiration, and from the sly looks they gave each other it is doubtful if, then to tender vows, which led to the plighting of their troth. Just how long Bartholomew Columbus remained under the eyes of the prayerful nuns without detection is not known, but it is certain that the young people did not lose much time in wooing, for in 1472 Dona Felipa became Mrs. Christopher Columbus.

The marriage was, without doubt, a love match, for neither of the contracting parties had many worldly goods. The bride's dower consisted of a small property in Porto Santo. Columbus had a "stout heart and a willing hand." The Perestrellos were of Italian origin, Prince Henry, in a scholarly manner, endeavored to overthrow superstition. He was himself a natural collage and observatory at Sagres, surrounded the most eminent professors of mathematics, astronomy, improved maps and charts to be made and the compass to be more generally used. He had the same fondness for new ideas in his schemes, and in 1418 he dispatched three of his most skillful navigators, John Gonsalvez Zarco, Tristan Vaz Texeira and Bartolomeo de Perestrello, on a voyage of exploration along the coast of Barbary. They had scarcely gotten out of sight of land when a violent storm arose which drove their vessel far to the westward. By what seemed a special providence they drifted into a safe harbor on the shore of an unknown island, which they named, in gratitude for their deliverance, Porto Santo. When the storm abated they perceived what was apparently a low bank of clouds in the western horizon, which proved, upon investigation, to be another island, abounding in timber lands, in consequence of which fact they named it Madeira, the Portuguese for timber. Elated with their success, they made all possible speed back to Portugal and reported to their royal commander.

Prince Henry at once fitted out three ships, which he gave to his captains, with orders to return and colonize the islands. To Perestrello he assigned the governmentship of Porto Santo. Filled with ambition by the honor conferred upon him by his patron, Perestrello sought in his enthusiasm to rival the achievements of the first great naval discoverer. He was not content to emulate the maritime success only of that time honored sailor all would have done well with him. Unfortunately he endeavored to surpass his zoological exploits as well, and consequently failed in his day and generation possessed the earth, compared to which his little island was a somewhat limited domain. Two and two he conveyed a pair of animals to the vessel, his ship for transportation to his distant home, that they might increase and multiply and replenish the insure an always well-filled larder in the gubernatorial mansion. Among them was a pair of rabbits, the choice of which proved concisively that Dom Bartolomeo had given more attention to the study of natural history than to that of arithmetic. In an incredibly short space of time the rabbits overran the land. They multiplied to an extent that defied extermination, and by their insatiable voracity destroyed every blade and bud of grass, so that the fertile island soon became a desert, and Dom Bartolomeo was obliged to leave it and seek greener pastures in Portugal. He did not lose courage, however, but with his wife visited Porto Santo, and was then accompanied by his second wife, Dona Isabella Moniz. Guided by an inspiration which had been given to his mind, and from him she imbibed a daring spirit and a love of adventure quite equal to that of her lord. In the year 1478 Dom Bartolomeo died, and his widow, returning to Lisbon, placed Don Felipe in the convent of All Saints to complete her education.

Shortly after this time, Christopher Columbus drifted to Lisbon. Proxy historians assume that he was drawn thither by the hope of further maritime discoveries, which had spread far and wide, and which were attracting the serious and unstinted attention of many of the Portuguese capital. The fact that his brother, Bartholomew, was a resident of Lisbon, joined to the fact engaged in the business of making maps and charts and the sale of books, would seem reasonable cause for the appearance of Columbus there, especially as he became a partner in the business.

He was then a lusty, strapping youth of age, tall and well proportioned, affable, yet dignified in manner and pleasant in speech. His rather long face

I coincident to wasn't, still rose quickly to my feet and pursued the moving green. It turned out to be a woman, and she was walking by the side of a tall man. The green she wore was China silk of a soft, exquisite shade, and had a green and white pattern running over it. At the bottom of the skirt there were five ruffles all silk-edged; the lowest was of a shade to match the gown, and each one above was a trifle darker green, so that the top one presented a striking contrast to the silk of the skirt. The plain, tightfitting waist was girdled by a broad sash of dark green, and at the neck was a pretty yoke of fine white lace. So far I liked the dress, but I didn't like the long, black lace jacket which fell over it, a jacket which was fitted in tight at the back, which had a large high collar, big puffed sleeves and was turned back from the front of the dress in long, double revers. The bonnet of it almost touched the ruffles at the bottom of the skirt.

Some of the girls here have very pretty hats. One wears a big straw hat with a high slender crown, chestnut colored, and has the same wide ruffs of the same shade in front, over which hang long plumes of creamy yellow. Another places the lance over the front of the crown, and down over her hair are still more plumes in pale lavender. I like a little more color—one very well that is made of green crepe over a small frame. The ruffles are held down by a twist of ribbon that runs around and is tied in a piquant bow at the back. Some plumes and aigrettes stand up in front. Another is worn by a bride, and is all in gray. It is a little capote, oneeighth of a yard in each pattern, and has some fine gray flowers in front, and a full facing of gray velvet in front.

Dressed and made as stylish as in white, but it isn't white serge or flannel or anything of that sort. Oh! not it's a fine, coarse-meshed material that looks more like common crash than any thing else, but which costs a good deal more than crash. Some varieties of it are after the mummy cloth order. It comes in all the new shades—plain skirts, blazers and striped silk fronts, and they are the coolest looking things summer can wear. Wear white chemisettes with them, and the whole thing can be done up as often as you please, so that you can always look spotlessly clean in one of them.

The tennis girl and the cycling girl has every fashion decree for her keeping cool. The tennis girl wears a jacket now that has no sleeves, so that her arms are perfectly free to play ball or anything but the thin silk of her shirt. And the cycling girl, instead of putting her silk front on a thin linen back, simply puts it on nothing. She fastens a band of black to each side of the front, which clasps tight around her waist and at the neck she runs a little ruche ing all around, which hooks at the back. This makes a perfect shirt waist, and how she only needs a blazer.

The new bodices are widest under the arms and narrowest both back and front.

Sleeve puffs aren't a bit smaller. They are still large, however, and a little broader. The baby shoulder puffs are very pretty.

Lawn is such a fine linen lawns that it's impossible to find any more pretty ones.

A City in Two Hemispheres.

In one respect at least Quito, the capital of Ecuador, is the most unique city in the world—it is situated in both the northern and the southern hemispheres, a distinction claimed by no other place of importance on the globe. At high noon the sun rises and sets at six o'clock the year around. You may forget to wind your watch while you are in the Ecuadorean capital, but you need not hunt up a regulator—set it when the sun rises or sets and you will be sure to be right. Old Sol makes no mistakes. In one part of the city the thermometer ranges from 60 to 70 all winter, who is just across the street. The seasons, as far as names are concerned, change with the seasons, but as the temperature is remarkably even, these curious points are seldom thought of, and the people of the 50,000 people who make Quito their home.

Women Who Deal in Tea.

There is in London a firm of women importers who have been in the tea trade in Ceylon and carry on their business entirely through women brokers, and their success has been a great success. At first difficulty encountered by the women is in packing, but this they are fast overcoming, and are rapidly taking the lead. The rooms where this essentially feminine luxury is dispensed in London are quite blue and pretty, decorated in a very pretty fashion and are becoming a favorite rendezvous for women, where they meet and entertain their friends in the nearest approach to the man's club method yet evolved.

People Who Borrow Books.

Book-borrowers are, probably, the most annoying people in the world, and there is no reason why they should exist at all in these days of cheap literature, and the free circulation of books and other establishments of a similar nature. Book-borrowers are usually lazy people, who will not take the trouble to go and buy a book for themselves if they can get it from a friend for nothing. I really do not see why a man should lend his books any more than he should his chairs or dining-room table. You might do without the second and the third, but you could scarcely exist without the first. If you like to give anyone a book by all means do so; but if you lend a book, it generally means losing it, for which you receive no thanks or even an apology. I have always been fond of lending books, for I have always found, if a friend borrows a volume—which he probably does not look at for a fortnight—you immediately have a chance to refer to the last he has left the house. I once heard of a fine old bibliophile who had the prize collection all his private friends intended to lend one, he would look inside it and say: "Yes, with great pleasure. I see that before he thirty shillings, which will be refunded when the volume is returned." He argued that if the book is not worth the money he would be cheerfully paid; but he found these so seldom that he gave up the habit of lending his books, or had them returned in dilapidated condition.—London Graphic.

PROTECTION FOR THE FEW.

The recent Democratic National Convention resolved:

"We denounce the Republican policy of protection as a fraud on the labor of the great majority of the American people for the benefit of the few."

And the Convention of representative Democrats thereby proclaimed a truth which recent events are daily making more and more manifest.

The McKinley tariff bill was framed by mercenary interests for mercenary purposes, and passed as a reward for partisan service.

It invited tribute on the industrial and business classes for the special benefit of pampered millionaires and monopolists.

It deceitfully promised to protect and advance wages, but has utterly failed to redeem the pledge.

It is in effect a fraud.

The people are discovering its real character, and the vicinity of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, furnishes the last object lesson of blessed one-sided McKinleyism.

There a large iron and steel establishment, the rich proprietors of which are ardent protectionists, first and foremost for their own plethoric pockets of course, and the chief of whose from the palace in Scotland lavishly displays American protected wealth, locked out from employment many hundreds of workmen, because, naturally refusing upon the pro-fused Republican policy of protection to home labor, the poor fellows demurred against having their hard-earned wages and just privileges reduced.

Down with fraud of every shape and hue.

UP WITH TARIFF REFORM AND EQUAL RIGHTS.

PINKERTONISM.

The business of a private detective is to detect rogues and uncover crime.

That far the men hired by Mr. Pinkerton can go and be sustained, but when he arms hundreds of men with rifles and revolvers, and sends them as an organized army to oversee and subdue a body of discharged workingmen WHO HAD NOT COMMITTED ANY CRIME, he is usurping the powers and authority of law and propriety, no matter how strong and mighty his employers may be.

Property can be protected and disturbance quelled by sworn AGENTS OF THE LAW, and the legal machinery for its enforcement is abundant.

If the police force of a municipality, after exhausting its full powers, cannot uphold the law and preserve order, the Sheriff may be called in, with any number of special deputies, and if he fails in the effort, then it becomes the duty of the Governor of the State to interfere with the military under his command.

Private armies marching as to war, under paid contracts, are alien to the institutions of this country.

The State of New Jersey has wisely enacted a law that NO SUCH ORGANIZED BODY OF MEN SHALL ENTER HER DOMAIN, and Pennsylvania will no doubt now do likewise.

WHY?

Why is ex President Cleveland the recipient of such wide-spread popular confidence and respect?

Why does he occupy a much higher position before the people than mere partisanship can bestow?

To answer these questions needs no fine span argument, only the direct expression of the honest public mind.

It is because he forms statesman judgment intelligently, courageously avows his own convictions of right, and discharges every duty as a sacred trust implanted by God.

Because he is thoroughly honest and competent.

He comes fully up to the grand old Jeffersonian standard of official worth.

There is no canting hypocrisy about him. His actions tally squarely with open profession. He is exactly what he appears and means what he says.

Such characteristics in a public man the people justly value and applaud.

For President,
GROVER CLEVELAND.

Bettman of Plainfield, was selected to take down the testimony of the several witnesses.

SCARED THE HORSE AND RODE AWAY

Bad Ex. Stevens of Somerville Chased Mr. Stone of Lebanon Till He Caught Him, and Then Had Him Arrested.

Sunday morning at 8, Elijah Stevens, accompanied by his wife, started to drive from Somerville to White House, about eight miles distant, to visit friends. The horse which took them was a gentle, safe animal which Stevens's wife had been in the habit of driving. It was hitched to a light road, top-buggy.

When just approaching Mechanicsville, nearly three miles and a half above North Branch, Stevens saw a solitary equestrian approaching over the brow of the hill, coming towards him. The road at that point is very wide, and in order to give the rider of the silent steed plenty of room Stevens pulled way out to the right as near the ditch as possible, leaving hardly half of the road fully four feet more in which the man could pass.

As they neared one another no accident was looked for. But the wheelman swerved to the left and rode so close to the buggy that the handle bar just touched the spokes of the front wheel. The noise caused the horse to suddenly plunge forward, overturning the carriage and tossing Mrs. Stevens out on the grass top. Although the animal was going at a high rate of speed, Stevens managed to hold on to the reins and with his disengaged arm loosen his wife and push her out in the road where she fell in a heap. Then walking along the shaft he caught the frightened horse by the head and brought him to a stand-still.

Looking back he saw his wife just struggling to her feet, and the bicyclist fully half a mile down the road. Mrs. Mr. Stevens was so enraged at this act of a man who by sheer carelessness had caused an accident that might have resulted in loss of life, that she handed the ing into his wife he unbuckled the breaststrap—the only bit of harness not broken and just leaping upon the horse's back he started in pursuit. For fully three miles he chased the unknown rider, gaining on him at every stride of the horse. Half a mile from North Branch he caught the man who was really compelled to stop from sheer exhaustion. He gave his name as John Sloan, of Lebanon, and said he was sorry that he was on the right track. A Mr. Stiner who lives at North Branch was called upon to decide who was to blame and upon going to the scene said that Sloan was at fault he being fully four feet out of his way. Thereupon Mr. Stevens went to justice Shafer and sent back a warrant for young Sloan's arrest. The justice held him in $500 bail and Mr. Stiner drove the Stevenses home. Since that time Mrs. Stevens has been completely prostrated, both of her legs being badly bruised, while the shock to her nervous system was very great.

Sloan is a grandson of Nathan Hoffman, of Lebanon, and also of Samuel Sloan, of North Branch. He was very anxious to secure bail, but as the justice of the peace that he would see him yesterday with his guardian and pay all damages. What enraged Stevens was the fact that the young man ran away from his wheel when by jumping off his wheel and catching the horse by the head the accident would have been avoided.

THE BROAD TIRE'S THE THING.

Lumbermen in Wheels Will Help Preserve Our Excellent County Roads.

The day of broad tires is coming slowly, but apparently with a reasonable degree of certainty. And it is to be hoped by compulsory action so much as through common-sense legislation and the good common-sense of the people. Says The Engineering Record:

Michigan has for five years past had upon its statute books a provision designed to promote the use of wide tires, by reducing the taxation upon its highways. In place of compulsory enactment it was deemed wiser to make it for the pecuniary interest of the users of the roads to use wide instead of narrow tires, and by remissible abatement from the taxes levied in the remission of a part of the highway tax, for each inch, for the smaller loads exceeding 800 pounds in weight, said remissity receive a per cent remissible abatement of the amount of such tax, provided, however, that such retsate shall not exceed in any one year three days' road tax to any one person. Persons are forbidden to make affidavit before an overseer of highways for the purpose of securing the credit upon which affidavit they are credited with the amount of rebate of their highway tax. The Department of State of Michigan reports that this legislation has been found satisfactory, and has had beneficial effect in results.

In such counties as Union—connected the Elizabeth Journal—where loftier roads have been built at great cost, wide tires would not in the same manner as steam rollers, packing down and smoothing the roadway. But the narrow tires now in use cut into it, grind the road bed to powder and wear ruts. The broad tire ought to come here soon.

TO COMPETE FOR THE PENNANT.

Elizabeth Strengthening Her Team for the Supreme Struggle Next Saturday.

The Y. M. C. I. A. of Elizabeth will meet the Crescent League of Plainfield on the Third street grounds, at Elizabeth, next Saturday, and whoever wins the game will be, for a time at least, on top of the heap in the race for the pennant. Coogan and Egan have been released by Brooklyn, Collins of the Jamaica and Manhattac college, and who has been playing with Staten Island Athletic club, will play hereafter with the Elizabethan aspirants for the pennant. In the game of the Staten Island Athletic club against the Schuylkill Navy Athletic club, July 4, Collins pitched a very fine game for the Islanders. He repeated the same performance last Wednesday in the game between the Islanders and Plainfield. The management of the Elizabethan aspirants another strong hitter and fielder under consideration, and will probably secure him for Saturday's game against the Crescents.

The Woman Who Looms and Frets.

The two-months-old baby boy that was left on Alfred D. Baker's doorstep, Wednesday night, as exclusively detailed in these columns last evening, is still occupying the little bassinette among the pets of Harkinstown. All day yesterday Baker was walking about the streets carrying the child and showing it to all his acquaintances. When the mother of the basket is not yet known, but it is now an assured fact that she came from New York and went back there the same night.

When conductor Henry Walcott arrived at Somerville, last night, at 10, he was interviewed in regard to the matter, and said that the woman was young and pretty, that she took the train at Jersey City and returned there. When going back, he added, she fell and hurt herself, was compelled to awaken her when the train arrived at Jersey City.

WANT THE OPEN BRETHREN BACK.

The Plymouth Brethren to Return to the Plainfield Conference.

The regular annual conference of the Plymouth Brethren is being held in this city, having begun its sessions early in the week. Between three and four hundred delegates are present. The convention is held in three large tents on the grounds of Paul J. Lehmann, in West Park place, corner of Watchung avenue and Richmond avenue. He is one of the most prominent members of the sect, which arose in England many years ago and has a religious people of all denominations who were opposed to church government.

The annual gathering, now officers of any sort. In the convention there is no chairman, no secretary, apparently no head, and yet the deliberations have been carried on harmoniously.

The question of again admitting to their communion the open brethren, who split off from the sect many years ago in England and came up and was decided. It was this that attracted delegates here from all over the world. After many days of hot discussion it was decided Sunday that the branches of the sect be reunited and that the open brethren and Plymouth brethren be hereafter one in communion.

The discussion began Tuesday and lasted all the week, and has been the only important matter taken up. The convention remains in session until Thursday.

Among the prominent preachers present are: E. W. Grant, Plainfield; J. S. Pierson, Key West, Fla.; Charles Holden, Chicago; C. Austin Seward; George McCandless, Elizabeth; J. B. Jeffries, Indianapolis; J. S. Marlatte, Lowell, Mass.; H. M. Scott, David Littell, and Charles Van Horn, Minneapolis; C. H. Booth, North Carolina.

PRAISE FOR WARDEN DODD.

Plainfield's ex-Chief Commended for His Efficiency and Good Management.

Immediately after the roll-call at last Thursday's meeting of the Union county board of freeholders, director Bulloy handed clerk Gaul a letter which he said he neglected to have read at the last meeting of the board.

It was from the officers of the State jail at Trenton, stating that on May 27 an official inspection of the condition and management of the Union county jail was made by the committee, accompanied by some of the State officials and the members of the Union county branch. The visitors reported that the jail was in condition and was equipped with any jail in New Jersey; in fact there is only one other jail in the State so well conducted and well kept. That is in Passaic county, the resident condition of which is due to its efficient warden. The committee found warden Charles W. Dodd of Plainfield to be thoroughly efficient, and they recommended that for the best interests of the county he be retained in office. The committee added that the suggestion and recommendation were made unknown to Mr. Dodd, and without the least solicitation on his part.

The letter was received and placed on file.

PEACE STREET, NOT PARK AVENUE!

The Electric Railway Has Secured Consents for the Proper Right of Way to the Station.

The Plainfield Street Railway company has obtained sufficient consents of property owners along the line to secure the right of way from where its tracks now stop at Front and Somerset streets, through Front and Peace streets to the station.

Consequently a special meeting of the common council was held on Thursday evening, probably, to act upon the petition of the company for a franchise to extend its road in that direction. This will be a disappointment to the residents on Park avenue who hoped to induce the railway to come that way. But Park avenue is not a wide enough thoroughfare for street car tracks, and if the cars on its way to the trains would not be so well served in a street where there would be blocks and delays. Besides, there are a number of the councilmen—including such level-headed men as Mr. Fink—who would sensibly and justly refuse to vote permission to lay tracks and run cars on Park avenue to the detriment to North avenue. Peace street is the proper way.

LOST MONEY ON THE SALE.

A Hebrew Stranger Finds Plainfield a Poor Place to Do Business in.

Peter Rothmaker, a black-bearded Hebrew, peddler of cheap neckties, arrived in town on Tuesday and was arrested by sergeant Lynch not to sell without a license. Detective Frisbee, however, of the Fourth ward precinct staff, did some charitable missionary work for him and had him looked up. The prisoner took it as a hardship because the sergeant refused to let him peddle without a license. Detective Frisbee gave judge Dodington convincing proof of his guilt, and Rothmaker was fined $2 and told to get out of town or else get a license. He said he was a poor man, and had to pay up a Hebrew friend in town and borrow the money to save him from going to jail for 10 days. Through he had appealed to several people and urged them to buy his goods, he had sold only one tie, and that to Frisbee who paid 5 cents for it. Rothmaker said then that he would go to jail as he had only used the question as an introduction, preliminary to asking the shortest road to Liberty town. Frisbee wears his new tie proudly.

SYMPATHY FROM THE BOROUGH.

North Plainfield Democrats Open Their Campaign, and Take Action on the Homestead Strike.

An enthusiastic meeting of the North Plainfield Democrats was held at their headquarters on Second street, Thursday night. Vigorous addresses were made by James E. Martine and mayor William J. Saunders, and the whole policy was most emphatically endorsed. The following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That while we deprecate the Carnegie carnage at Homestead, Pa., we extend our sympathy to the representatives of labor who stand up against a corporation of unbridled wages, and we say at the door of the Republican party the responsibility for the conflict which is the logical result of broken promises made to the people by the congress of 1890, and reiterated and installed in that deceptive measure the McKinley bill.

CAUGHT!

A Gang of Men Who Looted Stores Captured at the Bank.

Two of Plainfield's alert policemen were traversing the streets at daybreak Tuesday morning, when four men were seen stealing in towards the rear of the First National bank. The men procured a ladder, placed it against the building and ascended to the roof.

"We are just in time to prevent a great bank robbery and cover ourselves with glory"—spoke one officer to the other.

They saw that the men had another evidently containing burglars' tools, and they hastened to anticipate and prevent their raid on the treasury in the safety vaults.

Stealthily creeping up the ladder, the policemen reached the roof, and while drawn clubs stole softly up to the would-be burglars, when they were stopped as though about to cut a hole in the roof to lower themselves through.

Unfortunately, the tin of the roof suddenly gave a rattling sound under the footsteps of the officers, and the plunderers turned in alarm.

Then a most dangerous hand-to-hand encounter seemed inevitable. The officers realized their peril, but sprang bravely forward, resolved to do their duty to the bitter end. Would they be overpowered by the ruffianly robbers? Would their senseless bodies be hurled from the roof-top to the cruel pavement below? No; they were saved! For a peal of merry laughter breaks the stillness of the morning air, and the plumbers from the shops of Carney Bros. explain that they had been repairing the tin roof, and took this early hour for the work to avoid the intense heat of the summer day.

$100 FOR THE BLIND GIRL.

Mrs. Williams's Fair at the Netherwood for Her Benefit, Again a Very Great Success.

The largest of The Netherwood's creaking rooms, draped and decorated, brilliantly lighted, and set around with petit booths and little tables, was filled Tuesday evening from 7:30 with people who were working earnestly for charity's sake and liberal patrons contributing towards the success of liberal efforts. The occasion was a fair conducted for a most worthy cause by Mrs. H. W Williams, and carried for-ward in prosperous results by her with the assistance of Mrs. J. E. Spencer, Mrs. A. J. Haney, Mrs. Homer Bridgman, Mrs. A. L. Goodrun, Miss McCall, Miss Jor ian and Messrs. Jordan, Ranney and Harold Waddell.

Among the contributors of the varied goods that were offered, from a French clock to a skillet of cake, were J. E. Spencer, William Wardell, F. E. Miller and many others among the guests of the house. Mr. Waddell not only donated immense pumbe of Hoyle's finest card-boxes and chocolate, but labored faithfully the whole evening through in disposing of them. The sums of fancy work that came from the hands of the ladies were all spoken for before completion, and many of the knitted goods did double duty for charity as they were first bought from poor women and then sold for the benefit of Mrs. Williams's protege, Cecilia McNamara, the blind girl. The net profit of the fair was $100, about the same as last year.

Among the most generous buyers were Mrs. William J. Boome and Mrs. Henry D. Brewster of North Plainfield.

How the Harkinstown Fouls Trod It.

News of the West Ends' victory in Elizabeth on Saturday afternoon reached Somerville a very few moments after the game was over, and speedily following came the welcome despatch over the wires that Wardell had beaten Plainfield. The latter piece of intelligence was received with less enthusiasm by the Somervillians than was the former, for the reason that while the West Ends were expected to win, no one thought that Plainfield could by any possibility do anything with the Crescents' mighty ball tos-ers. The train which arrived in Somerville at 7 brought the small contingent of Plainfield rooters, many of them delighted, leaped from the cars and made the air tremble with the club slogan.

Wardell displayed a fine record in front of the Harkinstown newspaper offices early in the evening with the results of both games and the record of the clubs for the season. The following bulletins were tied for first place. This announcement caused the greatest amount of excitement and knots of people were seen for hours on the street corners discussing the big luck of the West Ends in rising from the bottom of the ladder to the top rung in five weeks. The only regret was that Plainfield still stood side by side with the Somervillians at the top. There is not a man, woman or child in the town whose allegiance to the West End club is not now iron bound. Westfield is playing good ball, though, and next Saturday's game at Somerville may be a tale of woe.

The Only Theatrical Attraction in New York.

It was decided yesterday by the management of the Academy of Music, together, with the sanction of Charles Frohman, to continue "A Trip to Chinatown" indefinitely. It will have to move away from the down last night unable to get seats. It looks now as if the piece might make a run there similar to the run which it made at the Bijou.

For the Saturday afternoon matinees, however, Plainfield parties may secure desirable seats by applying a few days in advance.

The Bicycle Trophy Rooms.

"How very quiet"—remarks the Elizabeth Journal—"the Plainfielders are keeping about the time given by their friends. Rumors are heard, nevertheless, that they will push the other clubs very hard in the bicycle trophy race. It is said that the E. A. C. team is already in training for the finals in three races, and from all accounts they hope to cover the tendollar gold piece before more than has been made in this county."

Held for the Grand Jury.

Lewis Sprague, arrested for assault on his wife and daughter, was held for the action of the grand jury Saturday night. A friend furnished $500 bail.

A Watched Officer on Guard.

No Connection Whatever!

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—Is There any connection between those facts and circumstances? Thursday evening, according to THE PRESS, the mayor refused to permit a high-class circus to come to Plainfield; Friday evening the mayor was married (to $5,000); Saturday evening the mayor gave a Pawnee-Bill-Wild-West show permission to come to this city, and welcome, for $50.

WHAT, WHEN, WHERE!

Lots to Be for Free Baptism.

Now that Plainfield has its hydrants with a good pressure of water, the need of fire-engines is greatly lessened, and chief engineer Hoage is preparing a new set of rules and regulations for the government of each engine company will be limited to certain respective districts, except in emergency cases.

FIREMEN'S ACCOUNTS MIXED UP.

Secretary Bodine Missing, Two Wrecking Companies Owe an Old Hose Company to the Poor.

The Firemen's Relief association is in a bad muddle. Secretary Eugene N. Bodine, it is said, holds a note of $750 against that company, and unless the money is paid at once legal proceedings will be taken to collect it. This action has the sanction of a good-sized up trouble which for several years has existed between two of the local fire companies.

About two years ago the Empire Engine company owned a small steamed engine which did well enough for a few years, but as the town grew the firemen became dissatisfied. They wanted a newer and larger engine. The old steamed was accordingly sold to the city of Newark, which gave gave them a larger engine in exchange. The Westfield company also allowed a lump of hard cash to go with the old engine. The firemen were so anxious to get their new machine that they forgot all about a mortgage which the Firemen's Relief association held on the old engine.

The relief association of course had no objection to their taking it out of the town, and as the firemen had never been obliged to consult the local authorities as to their movements, no objections were made in that quarter.

The members of Empire company say that Hook and Ladder company No. 1 had a claim against it at the time the money was borrowed from the relief association to assist them in paying off the mortgage. The original amount borrowed was $800, $100 of which has been paid off. At 6 per cent interest, the debt now amounts to $1,300. The mortgage is outlawed by the statute of limitation, but the relief association holds a note given by Empire company four years ago and signed by the company's officers. The engine and the hook and ladder company also have referred the question to the township committee. The authorities have awakened to the fact that the firemen have never consulted them before, neither have they rendered any annual statements of their expenditures, and the firemen are greatly perturbed over the trouble.

PLAINFIELD THE WORST OFF.

Not What One Plenty of Company, in the Need of a County Sewer.

(C. C. Beale in Sanitary Engineer.)

Mayor Gilbert, of Plainfield, has touched on a subject that will yet be of large importance and necessity to all that section of Union county lying between Long Branch and Elizabeth. The same subject was briefly alluded to in a Cranford article in yesterday's Journal, and the time is not far distant when it will become the matter of leading interest throughout the central sections of Union county. This subject is the construction of a sewage system that will accommodate Plainfield, Fanwood, South Plainfield, Westfield, Cranford and Roselle. At present not one of these places has a proper sewer system. Cranford has the best, but its sewage is turned into the Rahway river, two miles from the Rahway water pumping-station, and this condition cannot exist much longer. The other places have no outlet for sewage. Plainfield is worst off on the lot, for it is the largest city, but all are growing and will soon be forced to construct some system.

Under all the circumstances plainly impracticable for each to have a system of its own and independent of the other ones the whole situation is marvelously simplified by the construction of a large sewer line running from Plainfield to the Staten Island Sound, and capable of carrying all the sewage of all the towns along the line. This need not be a costly system, for it need not be constructed so as to carry surface drainage. In the best systems of city sewers are not now made to carry surface water. When such a system is constructed it will insure the continuance of the present healthful condition of these beautiful towns, and will be an added inducement to people from the crowded cities to come to the country and reside in one of the most beautiful and mostenticpiraing sections of country within a radius of one hundred miles of New York. In fact the whole county now has magnificent roads, electric lights, pure water, schools, churches, railroads, and the dwelling houses are all the most desirable and popular of modern improvements, and with the addition of a sewer it will be the most thoroughly improved section in the State.

On the 16th of this month, the day of the last quartering of the moon, Jupiter and Luna are in conjunction, and as they are separated by only a few minutes of the latter, the meeting has every quality but one to recommend it to our earnest attention, and that exception lies in the fact of the two being below the horizon at the exact time of meeting. However, in the few hours before dawn on the 17th, the two celestial beauties will be in the vicinity of rare celestial beauty, and the two bodies above mentioned will form the most striking features.

THE BEAU-IDEAL OF SUMMER RESORTS.
Features of All Other Places Combined, With Perfect Management and Exquisite Service, at Normandie-by-the-Sea.
Normandie-by-the-Sea, as in all seasons of the past, is again the beau-ideal of summer resorts, and in fact the only one, of its kind in many ways in the world. Its breadth of attractiveness, so to speak, is beyond the possibility of any other resort to even approach. All formalities are offered every feature available at the seashore, mountain, lake, valley and river. Besides this, there really need be nothing more said than that it is owned by Gen'l Earle, the prince of hotel proprietors.
There is surf bathing in the mighty ocean on the finest beach along the coast, and also swimming in still water within a few hundred yards of one another. There are drives along the famous Rumson road that reminds one at times of Central Park, and again of Newport boulevards. There is trolling from the pier for the gamey bonito and for anything in the bay, and there is yachting or surf boating, trips to the races, and all other means of varied enjoyment presented at all other seaside resorts.
Then there is the hotel itself under the management of that thoughtful, watchful and careful host, P. B. Wright. The guests are not nothing and everything belongs to the guests. The hotel has its own ice and electric light plants, owns its own beach and river front, and in fact owns Normandie entire. Nothing is permitted about the place or even to use the railroad station, except the guests and attaches of the hotel.
Head-waiter James T. McGovern, whose popularity is the envy of all other head-waiters, and whose pos-session all Silver hotels are longing for, is in control of the dining room as usual. The menu and service are perfect. Miss J. A. Guerene, the new housekeeper, cannot be excelled in her office. The care of the rooms and the attendance of the maids are beyond criticism. The trip to and from Normandie either by rail or by boat is delightful.

A Good Show Coming.
Pawnee Bill's combined R. R. show, Historical Wild West, Indian museum, Grand Mexican hippodrome and exposition of Trained Animals, and Congress of Rough Noted Chiefs and Cow Boys, Vaqueros and attainbtions number of special features, will pay Plainfield a visit next Wednesday. It is under a management which has in the past eight years gained a most enviable reputation for dealing honestly and liberally with the people, and in presenting many features new and startling, and many tests which delight, amaze and amuse. The papers speak in the highest terms of both the exhibition and of the high character of this combination, and it is the kind of show to which the people will extend a hearty welcome. Genuine novelties and something new at reasonable prices, in place of simply bombast and brazen extortion, are what people want now, and will liberally patronize.

JAMES HALLETT'S CASE.

He Will and has Told of His Wild Career—and He is Held for Trial.

James W. Hallett, the man from New Market, who created such havoc about his home a few days ago, smashing $1,500 worth of furniture, was given a hearing Wednesday afternoon by justice Hayter of New Brunswick.

Mrs. Hallett, who is now inclined to be lenient towards him, does not think she can confound in jail if he will promise not to come near her house for two years. At the hearing Wednesday she and her son told the story of Hallett's wild career, as some described exclusively in these columns at the time.

Hallett was greatly discomfited while the hearing was on, and looked daggers at everyone in justice Hayter's court. The fact was brought out that the property he destroyed belonged to his wife. He was held for the grand jury. He may sign for trial and thus have his case more speedily disposed of.

NEW PASTOR FOR PLAINFIELD.

Dr. Kelsey's Successor Chosen in the Rev. Henry Miller.

As was predicted in these columns Tuesday evening, the congregation of the First Presbyterian church of Plainfield met and elected Rev. Henry T. Miller, at present pastor of the Fifth Presbyterian church at Chicago.

The meeting of the congregation was a protracted one, and the question of selecting a pastor was warmly debated. There were some who favored the examination of further candidates, before deciding on call any particular one; and when the Moderator's question "Are you ready for a call?" had been answered in the affirmative by the attendance, there was dissent over the choosing of a pastor.

The meeting was therefore quite interestingly exciting, but the controversies that were known to exist, and that were developed by the debate, did not result, as had been feared by some, in unpleasant personalities, but instead everything was conducted in a courteous, dignified and parliamentary way. Many spoke, and the speeches were very vigorous, but no bitter personal animosities were shown, and every difference was amicably adjusted and it was decided to call Rev. Miller. The vote in favor of the Chicago clergyman was not unanimous, but it was the necessary majority. And the elders and deacons of the church in the afternoon decided to extend the call to Mr. Miller and to prosecute the call before the Presbytery. The following document will therefore be signed by elders Mossman, Solomon, Lounsbury and Owen, and deacons Lindsay and Redford, at tested by the Rev. W. E. Honeyman, who was the efficient clerk of the session, and forwarded to the Rev. Mr. Miller:

The congregation of the First Presbyterian church of Plainfield, N. J., being now upon the grounds, well satisfied of the ministerial qualifications of you Henry T. Miller, and having good hopes, from our past experience of your labors, that your administrations in the Gospel will be blessed to our spiritual interests, do earnestly call and desire you to undertake the pastoral office in said congregation, promising you, in the enjoyment of your labor, all such support, encouragement and obedience as the Lord. And that you may be free from worldly cares and embarrassments, we hereby promise and oblige ourselves to pay to you annually the sum of $7,000 in quarterly payments, together with one month's vacation, during the time of your being and continuing the regular pastor of the church, in testimony whereof we have respectively subscribed our names on this day of July, A. D. 1892.

The only unpleasant feature of the evening was the foolish introduction of a resolution, at the opening of the session, censuring the reporters from the press, and insisting that they publish nothing of the proceedings detrimental to the church. Knowing that such action was contemplated, self-respecting reporters would have stayed away, and if any inaccuracies or misrepresentations are made in the reports of the meeting the ill-advised resolution of the session. The resolution have only themselves to blame.

Dr. Long Saves a Life.

Edmund H. Bone, of Newark, was almost drowned at Ocean Grove, Wednesday. Only the prompt attention of Dr. M. B. Long, of this city, who was fortunately present, saved his life. Mr. Bone came down to the shore with his wife and children, on a day excursion. He sent his family riding in an electric car while he took a surf bath. Suddenly he stepped in a hole and sank out of sight.

Rescuers with life lines around them dove down, found the man with difficulty and brought him ashore. Dr. Long, who was down at the seaside with the Crescent avenue excursionists, began at once the work of resuscitating the unfortunate man. There was a slight pulsation in the wrist, but the man's lungs were filled with water and his breathing had stopped. He was laid on his side and rubbed to produce artificial respiration and natural breathing should come again. It was twenty minutes before he was brought to life.

TROUBLE OVER DOG ACCOUNTS.

Only One Exciting Feature in a Tedious Council Session.

The Plainfield common council was in session from 8:30 to 9:50, Friday night and did nothing of great importance. Those present were Messrs. Bird, Case, Frame, Gallup, Ginna, Johnston, Ree and Weber. A large number of bills were presented from Mr. Pond, the dog catcher and pound-master were left unsettled for investigation. The dog-catcher reported 47 dogs impounded for the month, and the pound-master had 37 reported. These, too, the dog-catcher asked for $38 for killing 19 dogs not taken to the pound, which the committee considered he had no right to do. The whole account was very much muddled.

Wm. Kitchen was made pound-master, vice Edward Ayers, resigned.

A letter was received from Craig A. Marsh, announcing his departure on his annual vacation, and stating that Charles A. Reed would serve as corporation counsel in his absence. The borrowing of $3,000 in anticipation of taxes, for general purposes, was authorized.

The request to change the name of North Richmond street to Norwood avenue was introduced and tabled.

The Fence street project was laid over till August.

Two New Stations on the Central.

The Jersey Central Railroad company has decided to erect a new station at the foot of Danforth avenue, Greenville, in place of the dilapidated structure that has done service for the past twenty years. The new building will be built of stone and will be much larger than the present station. It will cost about $20,000. The plans have been submitted to several contractors and it is probable that the work will be started before Aug. 1.

The Newark and New York branch of the Central railroad will also erect a new station at Jackson avenue. The work upon this improvement will begin as soon as the plans are ready. The station will be built of wood and cost over $4,000.

Auction for Plainfield Committee.

[New Brunswick Home News.]

If the scheme of Dr. Pierce, the Buffalo medicine man, materializes, and he succeeds in pushing through the railroad from Bound Brook to New Brunswick, the traveling facilities of this place will be materially improved. To go to Plainfield, for instance, is now a matter of no small moment. The two cities are only twelve miles apart, yet to go from one to the other by rail involves a journey of twenty-eight miles, with a disagreeably long wait for connection at Elizabeth. By the new arrangement the distance by rail will be thirteen miles. The convenience in reaching either places will be equally great.

The Christening of James Mosher's Grandchildren.

Last Sunday morning in Dr. Mitchell's church, will always be a memorable date. It was the occasion of a most unusual and charming scene. Four sweet little maidens were christened. They were the daughters of James Mosher's daughters, and their grandfather stood at the altar with them.

The quartette of little women were: Helen Mosher Webb, daughter of Mrs. Webb, whose name was formerly Miss Anna Mosher; Helen Jay, whose mother was formerly Miss Emma Mosher; and Dorothy Webb, whose mother was also a Miss Mosher; Adda Mosher. The Rev. Mr. Welsh, father of the last, baptized all but his own, which was subsequently christened by Dr. Mitchell.

THE BICYCLE ROAD RACE.

PIKE'S TIME THE BEST.

Bad Roads, Slower and Scattered Are First Three in Time the Line.

A great crowd of people witnessed the Plainfield bicycle race from the Richmond house to Somerville and back Wednesday afternoon.

There was intense excitement. Owing to falls, punctured tires, and other mishaps, a number did not enter or drop out soon after starting.

A. C. Wyckoff's leg gave out on the road and he had to lie down by the roadside and send for assistance.

Wm. Ralston's tire burst, and he lost 12 minutes returning and having a borrowed wheel adjusted.

James E. Murray ran over a dog, had a terrible fall, and was so painfully injured as to be forced to drop out.

Harry Tarnall rode a good gaining race. His saved himself for the homestretch, and then fairly flew over the course, passing many competitors.

Each man's starting was given to him at the start, so as to avoid complicated calculation at the finish.

Chet Gotshall, 1, and A. E. Stover, 2, started at 2:00.

S. C. Crane, 4, A. C. Wyckoff, 6, and Thomas Burns, 7, started at 2:27.

C. H. Burt, 8, Charles Vanderveer, 9, (Somerset), and John Rafferty, 10, started at 2:29.

W. W. Nicholson, 11, William Ralston, 12, W. E. Tarnall, 13, and James E. Murray, 14, started at 2:30.

ALL READY FOR THE CARS.

Plainfield's New Railroad to be a Model One, and President Marion Officer, Free Use of His Tracks for Any Reasonable Letter than the Trolley.

The Plainfield electric street railway will begin its service as soon as the cars arrive. They were promised by the manufacturers on July 9, but the great demand for such cars all over the country since the trolley road has become so unusually popular for suburban travel, is beyond what all the car builders can handle. Contractor Fitzsimons has his work of building finished, and electrician Serrell has the overhead construction completed. The electric station will also be ready to furnish the motive power when required.

The roadbed is probably the best ever laid for the purpose anywhere. The rails are the heaviest made, which insures perfect smoothness in running. No expense has been, nor will be, spared by the company to make the Plainfield road a model one. If there is any particular in which the rights of the city or the people have not been complied with, the company will rectify the omission at once. The new pavement between the mountains of the street each side of the track at some points, but it is the fault of the city and not the railway company. Contractor Fitzsimons is to take up the pavement required by the street commissioner, when in some cases is below the present road bed of the street, and relay it. The city has yet to lower the surface each side of the track in conformity therewith.

As to the motive power and method, it has been established beyond question that at present the trolley system is the only thing that can give satisfactory service outside of the very largest cities where the density of population is sufficient to make it practicable. The people may rest assured that no soot as anything better presents itself the Plainfield Street Railway company will discard the trolley and adopt the other. President Nevius has been diligently searching for some better system for years, and almost every week some scheme is sent to him for the free application of an old power or the "discovery" of a new. He is so in earnest in this that he told a Press representative on Wednesday, that he will permit the use of the Plainfield tracks free of charge by the "Compressed Air" company to make a test and give an exhibition of the system that is being proposed for over the brook. He also says, the Plainfield Street Railway will adopt the system if it is proved the best.

WANTS REDRESS FOR A BLACKENED EYE.

Mr. Addis Sues Mr. Martin for the Possession of a Stove, and for the Disputed Debt that Caused It.

William Addis, of 5 Orange street, Friday swore out a warrant against Fred. H. Martin of 51 East Fifth street, for assault and battery. The warrant was issued by justice Nash. Mr. Martin waived examination and was held in $200 for the grand jury.

Mr. Addis says that he has for many weeks been trying to collect a bill of Mr. Martin; that on Friday he asked Mr. Martin to settle; that Mr. Martin came into his office at 51 North avenue and abused and villified him; that because of Mr. Martin's language he ordered him from the office; that Mr. Martin refused to go and he pushed him to the door; that at the door Mr. Martin turned and struck him a blow in the face, giving him a black eye; that he fell and went away. Mr. Addis further complains that the blow was such as to disagree his vision, and also that his head was blackened cheek and eye in proof thereof; and that a tooth was loosened and had to be pulled. He says these troubles, proceeding his assailant criminally he will begin civil suit for damages and will also sue for the amount of his old bill, which Mr. Martin claims is an excessive one.

Mr. Martin asked justice Nash to arrest Mr. Addis for ejecting him from his office, but that official declined on the grounds that Mr. Addis was assaulted first.

The Trade-Dollar Suit at Is.

As the 10,351 trade dollars sent from this city for New York, Wednesday morning, was running at full speed between Westfield and Orchard, a tank was thrown, that struck the front of the engine, and then fell to the door. Conductor "Cannon-Ball" Tuck had a narrow escape.

A PLAINFIELD WOMAN ACCUSED

DICK WESTON OF ENGLAND SAYS SHE IS A BIGAMIST.

He Claims to Have Followed Her Across Continents and Seas, and Finds Her Married to Another Man, So a Happy and Prosperous Plainfield Home—The Woman says Weston's a Bad Blackmailing Fraud, and Refers Him to Most Reputable Somerset Persons.

(From The Times of July 13.)

Richard Weston of England has for months been journeying about this globe on the track of his runaway wife, and claims to have found her living in Plainfield the bigamous consort of another man.

Weston is a short man of heavy build, with a carelessly-drooping black mustache, ruddy cheeks, a bright eye, and a tough visage. When he landed in Plainfield, Thursday morning, he was clad in broad-striped coat and vest that fitted him as close and trim as a swallow's feathers clings to the body, and a loose English cap hanging in wrinkled folds from his shoulders. He was as jolly-looking and stout as a tobacconist's figure of Punch, and his pronunciation of such words as round and fancy as a fat red-breasted robin's, and his laugh as prolonged gradually down like a swallow's dive.

Quite apparent to the keen eye of an American observer was the fact that Mr. Weston was of no conjugal saint. There were already evidences that he had sought solace from his griefs in drink, when he had been in Plainfield but an hour, and after a time he modestly narrated his back on the saloons, fished up a short-stemmed black-hosiest pipe from the depths of a capacious coat-pocket, crammed it with tobacco, and, smoking vigorously, wandered meditatively about the streets, gradually trending his steps towards the most English colony in the neighborhood of the big machine shops in the south-western section of the city. He had been making sly inquiries among the workmen, and found that there was liquor on his brain he was keenly alive to the consciousness of what he was about.

Near Grant avenue, on South Second street, he found a thrifty shoe-shop kept by Adam Young, a sharp-eyed little man, bristling with business.

The shoemaker sat hard at work in a small room at the rear of the store, seated on a cushioned box, plying awl and needle rapidly, and pulling away vigorously at waxed thread made bright and stout leather together.

The Englishman took as easy pose in the doorway as his portly form and his gaze sincerely, and made casual comments about the weather, the town, and the neighborhood. The shoemaker had been there three days, and was glad of the chance for a chat.

It was a report that Mr. Henry Corlies, a sister of his erring wife, was to be found in Plainfield. He had brought him to the Crescent city in hopes of chance tidings of the missing spouse. Therefore the question:

"Mooster Young, does thee know the name awf Corlies 'ecrabouts is?"

"Oh, yes"—said the shoemaker.—There lives a Mrs. Corlies living right down by, on Pond place. She had moved to Brooklyn, though, some time ago. He didn't know her present address, but somebody popular for suburban travel.

"Ho!"—said the foreigner—"so'er sister lives 'ere; does she?"

"Oh, yes"—responded the other.—"Her husband works down at Pond's."

Weston's eyes twinkled with an air of malicious triumph.

"Ho! ho!"—he said, making big eyes at the shoemaker, and drawling his words in a manner meant to be impressive—"so 'er husband works down to Pawnd's: 'e does, 'e does!"

The shoemaker reiterated somewhat angrily that her husband did work there, and seemed surprised and vexed at the stranger's manner.

"Don't be surprised"—was Weston's next ejaculation—"were I to tell thee 'ow wonderful 'ard 'e's ever been Pawnd's, do it ye knaw I"

The shoemaker's eyes dilated with astonishment, and he wondered at the strange question.

"I know them well,"—he said, simply and severely—"and her husband, Francis Corlies, of Pressed Steel Car, is a very decent young fellow and a good workman."

Weston shrieked. "E may be decent, but 'e's nawt so young. And 'e can tell 'e's with 'is hown tips as 'ow 'e 'as never set hupon on Pawnd's, and 'e does tell 'e 'as, for I'll be 'im, do ye knaw."

This was astounding news to the scandalized Adam Young, and he was breathless to reply. Weston hugely enjoyed his astonishment for a moment, then went on and told his story, made picturesque by his broad English accent, which sounded somewhat like Yorkshire slightly tempered with Londonese.

He said he was a well-to-do tobacconist of Islington, and that he had been married twenty years last April. He and his wife had occupied a pleasant home where every want of the woman was provided for, and they were happy and prospered. Thus the years passed till last summer, when Mrs. Weston took an ocean voyage to America, to visit her sister, Mrs. Henry Corlies. During the voyage, Weston disgustedly discovered that the wife of a dashing young officer named Stone, on board the trans-Atlantic steamer. Her infatuation was such, says Weston, that after her return to England she left home and maintained a clandestine correspondence and met him as often as he could stop over in London. About this time Mrs. Weston took an ocean voyage to America, to visit her sister, Mrs. Henry Corlies. During the voyage, Weston discovered, her affections were alienated by

THE MAN OF FASHION.

Patterns for Lapples and Overgaiters; for Commodious Caps and Outing Jackets—Knitted Articles That Can Be Made at Home.

[COPYRIGHT, 1892.]

"Never spend money for anything that you can have made at home better and cheaper than you can buy it."

This remark from a well-known man of fashion, who I believed, had never skipped even the print the thing he wanted, struck me as singular. I pilled him for an explanation.

"Well, to begin with, I can have prettier and better ties made right at home than I can buy from a haberdasher. Furthermore, I can have my shirtwaists made at home, and I do so. I have a half a dozen bathing suits made at home, all my lounging, smoking and under-arm gussets and the front is slashed to a desirable depth at the center; the opening is finished at the right side with an underlap or button stand and at the left side with a lap to overlap pointed at the lower end, and the front may be closed with buttons and buttonholes or with clasps. The front are applied patch pockets, which have pointed lower edges and are finished at the top with laps that are also pointed at the lower edges. The back is but slightly full and is gathered at each side of the center and finished to a yoke, which is pointed at the center of the lower edge. Each of the shirt sleeves has an opening at the back of the arm that is finished with facings, the overlapping facing being pointed at the top; and the lower edge is gathered and joined to a wristband, which may be closed with a button and buttonhole or with a stud. At the back is a rolling collar which turns from the top of a fitted band; and machine stitching finishes all the edges of the garment.

Plain, striped, spotted or figured wash silk, Oxford cloth, cambric, flannel, serge and checked, striped or plain flannel will develop attractively in the shirt, which is appropriate for outdoor sports of all kinds and may be worn with a blazer. Machine stitching will provide an attractive completion, but a perfectly plain finish is always in good taste. All the seams are finished in fell fashion.

In search's the latest four-in-hands are a little smaller, with the ends nearly pointed. Sometimes the ends are tied so as to stand out wide, forming a flaring spread effect. A plain four-in-hand bow and a pretty fancy hand bow, both of which are very easily tied, are also shown in the cut.

ALBERT EDWARD TYRRELL.

Lynch Law Among Rats.

In the neighborhood of Burley, England the other day a gamekeeper, looking over a wall, saw a dead hen in the field. Presently a rat ran up, sniffed at the defunct fowl with much satisfaction, and went away in some haste. The onlooker, who is a student of natural history, knew what that meant and removed the hen from the spot. In a minute or two the rat came back with half a dozen friends, with the evident intention of removing the carcass for future use. Arrived at the spot where the fowl had lain the rat raised a loud squeak of astonishment at its absence. In a trice the other rats fell upon him so savagely that they left him dead on the field as a warning not to play practical jokes with his friends.

FOR HOUSEHOLD USE.

Some Unique Inventions That Will Interest the Housewife.

An Electric Flatiron—A Cork That Will Fit Any Bottle—To Prevent Windows and Doors Rattling—Curtain Iron Fastener.

[COPYRIGHT, 1892.]

One of the latest products evolved from the brain of the ever-present inventor is a combination flatiron. It is alleged that this device will reduce the work in the laundry to a minimum. Just where the electricity is to come from is not plainly stated. It is claimed that the iron will heat in two minutes and retain an even temperature indefinitely.

ADJUSTABLE CORK.

Another invention is a cork which will, it is claimed, fit any bottle, from the two-ounce vial up to the five-gallon demijohn. This cork is made of rubber, as shown in the cut, and after it has been introduced into the neck of the bottle the thumb button is released and the rubber takes the form shown in the cut. The inventor gratuitously offers the suggestion that the cork will be found very useful for application to champagne bottles or in retaining other liquids of an effervescent nature.

KNIFE AND SCISSORS GRINDER AND CURLING IRON HEATER.

KNIVES AND SCISSORS SHARPENED.

Knives and scissors in a state of dullness are the cause of much loss of time and little little annoyance. A device for this is a knife and scissors grinder, which is shown herewith. According to the originator of this machine, the thing with a cutting edge can be sharpened by anybody. It is an every-day affair, it seems a good one, but as enquiry what it is best is a poor thing to sharpen a good knife on. The old-fashioned grindstone is superior in every way.

THE ANTI-WINDOW RATTLER.

This device is simplicity itself as regards construction. The illustration explains the workings of the rattler. It is held in place by the raised center as shown, this spring adjusting itself to window cracks which vary from an opening the thickness of a piece of cardboard up to one-fourth of an inch. The device is made of brass and is nickel coated.

DEVICE FOR CLEANING WATER PIPES.

Another invention especially designed to relieve the agony of those persons suffering from clogged water pipes, consists of a long, flexible tube, which, by hook or bolt tail, may be attached to the faucet. The device is constructed as follows: The end of the tube is provided with the usual screw handle; the cap is made of rubber and has a funnel sleeve to it, to keep it from slipping off. The tube is made of rubber and is provided with a spiral wire to keep it from collapsing. The end of the tube

CHOLERA IN CAMP.

Harrowing Experience of the Eighteenth Kansas Cavalry.

Terrible Hardships Endured by Volunteer Soldiers During the Indian War of 1867—Startling Mortality at Fort Hays.

[Special Kansas Letter.]

The periodical talk of the approach of a severe epidemic from Europe recalls to the other the terrible suffering, depressing experience and great mortality among the men of the battalion of Kansas cavalry organized for service against the Indians during the summer of 1867. This organization, consisting of three companies, "A," "B" and "D," was raised under a special call, authorized by the general government, to aid the troops then on the regular army, then available on the western frontier, bordering on the lands of the Cheyennes, Arapahoes and Comanches, who were creating a reign of terror among the settlers in the Saline, Republican and Solomon valleys.

The call was made the latter part of June, and by the 1st of July the three companies of one hundred men each were rendezvoused on the bank of the Smoky Hill river at Fort Harker, for muster-in and equipment for service.

The previous year, 1866, cholera had raged in Asiatic India, in China, in Russia, Kansas City and many smaller places, and the year before New York and Brooklyn had suffered severely. It had been visited by the dread disease. It was the genuine Asiatic cholera, and appeared in more wasteful in a regular war, visiting about the same number of regiments of infantry each season.

The first battalion of the Kansas volunteers had of the fearful malady, a dozen or more then in each company were down with the most griping sort of diarrhoea, but owing to the absence of any cases of cholera in camp no one realized the true nature of the complaint until several men had died. The regiment was encamped on the river bank with poor rations and using the hot and almost stagnant river water, and they were not stinted by the Ft. Harker post surgeon until the third day after the disease broke out. The ravages of the disease were terrible, and in the time four men had died, and half the command were complaining. The surgeon at once changed the water for the cease, and informed the officers that the cholera had been raging among the regulars for over a week, the mortality in a colored regiment at the post being especially heavy. This information appeared to have checked the ravages of the disease, and created a perfect panic. Men were suddenly taken down, while on guard or drill, and many died within a few hours after being taken to their quarters.

The first sergeant of Company "C," Henry Saunders, a splendid example of physical manhood, and who had been in a regiment in an Ohio regiment during the civil war, died in fearful agony on the fourth day within two hours after he had returned from drilling a squad of men, and he was followed closely by eight more of the same company. Nearly every tent in the camp grosse and impressions could be heard at all hours of the day and night, the dead were hurried to burial.

One officer who had just returned from some mounted duty, was suddenly taken before he got off his boots and spurs, and, after rolling around in misery for several hours without relief, he ordered his horse saddled, saddle his horse again and bring it to the tent. Then, by superhuman exertion, he got out of his tent and mounted his horse, but only in the saddle. His order was obeyed, and after mounting he put spurs to his horse and dashed off at full speed. He rode in this way three or four miles, and when he stopped the cholera had left him. He was as weak as a child in his orderly, who had followed him bareheaded, had to hold him in the saddle, while great drops of cold sweat dripped from his face in a torrent. The exertion had created a sudden circulation of the blood, and prevented the consumption of the bowels which precedes the fatal collapse.

When the men fully realized the nature of the fatal disease they became perfectly panic-stricken, and all made efforts to desert, and no less than a score succeeded. So wild did they become that the officers had to call their company stables with revolvers in hand to prevent their men from saddling their horses to flee from the fatal camp. The scene during the battalion during the cholera ravages was as follows:

Set men from Company A;
Nine men from Company B;
Thirteen men from Company C;
Seven men from Company D.

One lieutenant from Company D and Dr. Powers, a young doctor who had been detailed as the assistant surgeon of the regiment, also died. Within over half of the entire command had been sick. On the eighth day orders were issued to march the battalion in a new camp, some six miles west, and after the battalion had marched a mile to avoid a collapse, the command completely recovered, and for the next two years it rendered most efficient service against the Indians, a portion of it fighting the battle of Prairie Dog, on the 29th and 30th of the next month (August), and killing sixty of the Indians. It had no more cases of cholera, though that cholera raged on the banks of the Smoky Hill will ever forget its terrible and wretched sights.

The rise of the league was probably suggested by the adoption of a Princess day, in honor of Lord Beaconsfield, it has grown wonderfully in popularity. The true origin of Primrose day is said to be the idea of a particular friend of Lord Beaconsfield, who accepted the idea of handing the idea to a few friends they met about spontaneously to suggest to Queen Victoria that Primrose day be a large supply of the flowers on hand that day, and then to suggest to their acquaintances that they wear them as a special tribute to the memory of one of the nation's most eminent citizens to whom the queen offered to confer the title of earl, and declined. BEAUTIFUL SCENERY.

The Road from Washington to Cabin Johns Bridge.

Favorite Thoroughfare with All Classes of Society—Digging and Excursions to Historic Turnouts—History of Fort Stanton.

[Special Washington Letter.]

The vicinity of Washington abounds in beautiful and unsurpassed drives, but the favorite thoroughfare with all classes of Washington society is the road to Cabin Johns Bridge. Every bright Sunday the owners of fast horses, and of those not so fast, but them to the number of thousands, follow the quiet little annex to Washington, and take the delightful road to the bridge. It has been so ever since the bridge was built in 18—and it will probably remain so for all time.

Let us follow this red-wheeled road wagon, in which the "sporty" looking gentleman is explaining to his friend, evidently a stranger, the different places of interest along the way. We will be sure to see all that is to be seen, as he and his gray mare are a feature of the road every pleasant Sunday.

After leaving Georgetown we follow along the banks of the Potomac for about a mile and then make a turn at right angles to the river only to take a parallel road a little higher up. Before we turn, however, let us take a look back at the city. How pretty it looks with its dome-like capitol spanning the river at the end of Georgetown and the Washington monument and capitol in the distance. Right opposite us, on the Virginia side of the river, are a score of houses picturesquely situated among a grove of young trees. Each one has a flag flying from their tops. We had better, however, admire them from the safe distance of the Maryland shore, for despite their innocent appearance, they are said to be the homes of the great American tigers.

Now let us continue our drive. For a short time we lose sight of the river, although hearing in the same direction. As we get upon higher ground we come in sight of the first reservoir. This is a beautiful bit of clear water from which the city is supplied with alleged aqua pura. It is hard to explain the fascination which the water of the reservoirs to the muddy fluid which issues from the faucets in our town houses at this season of the year. The country villas dot the landscape in the neighborhood of the reservoirs, and which there are many. An electric road in operation by a soundless route from Georgetown to Cabin John's bridge, the queens of which a "house" is and the real estate dealers are flourishing.

Soon after passing the reservoirs we pass over a comparatively level piece of ground until the road takes a sudden turn to the right and we find ourselves on another reservoir. Up this hill on the other side we come upon the road again, which is here a narrow one and is known as the Conduit road. Along this we go for a short distance, when we find ourselves at the entrance to Glen Echo.

Glen Echo is a beautiful spot, and a similar enjoyment in carrying their manners along at an increased rate of speed, and here it is that the fun comes in and the numerous "brushes" take place. Let us stop for a few minutes on one side of the road and watch the steady stream of Washington society drive past. In the van comes a blonde young man in a very high dog cart. He is from New York and came here with the spring races and, making "a big stake," is basking in the delights of Washington life that he has remained ever since. He will not be able to hold his head long with the dog cart, however. Immediately behind him, and in matched contrast, comes the handsome Senator Stockbridge, who loves to drive in the country every pleasant afternoon. Here is a bushhood with "Tom" young people out for a Sunday's frolic. That flamboyant old gentleman with the gray side whiskers is the British minister, Sir Julian Pauncefote, and that blonde head of hair in the red-wheeled Brewster brougham right behind is the vice president, Mr. Morton. That blonde-mustached man driving the team of bays is Campbell Carrington, a prominent criminal lawyer of this city, who, it is said, has a different pair of horses for every day in the week. That with looking old man with his handsome wife is Senator Stanford, of California. They drive their pair of well-matched black coach horses, Major and George, and their landau is an object of much attention and admiration from the occupants of the other vehicles. That genial-looking gentleman with the brown beard is Senator Proctor, of Vermont, and few teams in the city can beat that pair of silver sorrels which he is driving before the red-wheeled landau. Here comes what looks to be a pretty close race. Hon. Archie Bliss, of New York, with his spanking team of bays hitched to a side-bar trap, is slightly in advance of his friend Senator Manderson, who is driving a little trotting mare with a record of 2:28 to a light Kensington road wagon. The Brazilian minister, Senor Mendonca, is out on horseback accompanied by his outriders, who wear a livery of dark green with flowers and cockades of yellow, the colors of the Brazilian legation. That gentleman in the "C" spring brougham, who is just getting out of the way of that pair of young fellows who are racing to the bridge, is Secretary of the Navy Tracy, who prefers his pair of coal blacks to the faster equines of his friends. F. M. Dudley is the veteran of the road, and he has driven fast horses for the past twenty years. For a long time he drove his trotting stallion, Rutherford Hayes, who could go close to 2:30, and now he has some of Hayes' get. That handsome gentleman driving the pair of well-matched bay mares is Col. Ainsworth, of the war department, and beside him is his friend Frank Comstock, who is adopting himself immensely behind his bay mare Nevee Tiss.

Now let us fall in line at the rear of the procession, satisfied that there will be many other teams to follow us. Yes, there is the rumble of the heavy wheels of a victoria and we can see its single occupant as the carriage passes by. Do not stare! It is Madeline, the queen of the demi-monde. Is she not beautiful as she reclines gracefully upon the cushions of her trap, looking neither to the right nor to the left and recognizing no one? She will soon be out of sight, and out of sight out of mind, so let us turn our attention to the natural beauties of the drive. We are now nearing the ruins of the famous Glen Echo, that beautiful spring retreat o'er which poets have put two summers the cash. Nothing remains of the glory and splendor of this charming spot but the old archway of which mention is bought. There is nothing left to remind us of the beautiful parquet hall, the orchestra stand, the lawn bowling with the fountain and flowers in the center and the hand playing Wagnerian melodies and harmonious Hungarian music. No longer does the Washington society belle bring her admirer down to Glen Echo and in which his father, then secretary of state, had a financial interest. The road was appropriated for the purpose of shipping coal from the Cumberland and other valleys, and Mr. Blaine's headquarters were in Baltimore.

While there Mr. Blaine married Miss Anita McCormick, of Chicago, daughter of the late Cyrus McCormick. The wedding took place at Richland Springs, N.

THE DEADLY GUILLOTINE.

It Has Now Been in Use a Century in La Belle France.

A very interesting centenary fell on April 25 last. Little was said about it and there was no public rejoicing. Yet the thing that might have been boasted in some way was a creditable invention, although it has a discreditable history. It is the guillotine. On April 25, 1792, the highwayman Pelletier was executed on the Place de Greve, in Paris, and the humanitarian invention of Dr. Louis was put in use for the first time.

It is a common and natural impression that this instrument was designed by Dr. Guillotin, whose name it bears. But it is now pretty well established that this is not so. Dr. Louis, the permanent secretary of the academy of medicine, was the inventor of it. There was a general desire for more merciful way of inflicting the death penalty. Dr. Louis was filled with this desire as were many others, and designed the model of the guillotine after a rougher Italian contrivance.

It was made by one Schmidt, manufacturer of musical instruments to Queen Marie Antoinette. Two years afterward the guillotine made from his model was used to rent off the heads of his royal patroness and her husband. Marie Antoinette was bereaved in the meantime of her friend and was also in favor of reforming the methods of capital punishment. Nobles were actually decapitated with the ax and common persons in other ways.

Dr. Guillotin wrote a pamphlet urging the adoption of the invention of his spring brougham, who is just getting member of the national assembly in consequence of the attention he drew to himself through his advocacy of this instrument. It was at first called the Louison or Louisette, but the name of the humane advocate was soon given to it.

Dr. Guillotin always protested against this use of his name. He did not die by the guillotine, as has been frequently stated. He passed away in 1814 at a good old age.

At the time of the introduction and adoption of the guillotine it was still used in some of the southern provinces. Twenty years before Dr. Louis had been broken on the wheel, with many horrible details of torture, for his attempt on the life of Louis XV. The torture was therefore, entirely done to humane motives. The fact that noble persons were decapitated and others broken by the wheel is also repugnant to growing democratic sentiment.

A BRIGHT YOUNG MAN.

Remarkably Successful Career of the Late Ebenezer Elmore.

Emmons Blaine, son of the illustrious ex-secretary, died at Chicago recently at the age of thirty-eight years. His father sent him to Harvard and he took a post graduate course in law. He was formerly assistant general freight agent of the Baltimore & Ohio. This position he resigned in December, 1897, to accept that of general freight and passenger agent of the Chicago, Santa Fe & Pacific road, which was then doing a big ballt between Chicago and Kansas City. In the spring of 1889 this road was reincorporated by the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe and Mr. Blaine was called to the vice presidency of the West Virginia, Central & Pittsburgh road, which was controlled by the Elkins and in which his father, then secretary of state, had a financial interest. This road was organized for the purpose of shipping coal from the Cumberland and other valleys, and Mr. Blaine's headquarters were in Baltimore.

A DRUMMER.

I'm only a drummer, I've nothing to do
But to pass my brave drum and make music for you.

I'm only a drummer, not quite twelve years
But I hope that my heart is full twenty years

If do not give orders; I've just to obey,
As quiky as a flash, what my officers say.

There are fellows who think that my task must be light,
Just beating a drum with a merry boy's might.

Yet drummers so taller than I am are found
Who march to the head's post proudly.

They followed the flag, in the days long ago,
When it waved its defiance, whoever was the foe.

They used to the bugles, so shrill and so sweet,
And they listened alone when the call rose repeat.

Oh, brave drummer-boys, though you lived or you died,
I took of your record, and stand by your side.

And beat my brave drum with the gladness of boy!
For the flag of our union then's flying above!

A COLUMN OF ICE.

Queer Freaks Played By Frozen Water in Cold Weather.

A lady in Rochester, N. Y., gave an empty cologne bottle to her little boy to play with on a recent cold day in winter. The bottle was of colorless glass, six inches high and three inches across at the bottom. About midway it began to taper, and was about half an inch in diameter at the top. Toward evening the child filled the bottle with water, inserted a cork, and left it on a shelf in the nursery.

In the morning a curious sight met the mother's eyes. The night had been cold and the water was frozen solid. Strange to say, the bottle was not broken, but out of the top rose a column of ice four inches tall, and exactly corresponding in diameter with the mouth of the bottle. The column of ice was as round and straight and true as a lead pencil. To its summit the cork was frozen tight. This phenomenon was viewed by the whole family, and all agreed that it was something unusual. To account for it the following theory was suggested:

It is well known that by a law of nature all substances contract with cold. Water is thus affected until the freezing point is reached, when crystallization takes place. The particles of ice then arrange themselves in such a manner that there is expansion instead of contraction in the water bottle. This is to say, a cubic foot of water will make more than a cubic foot of ice.

Putting the case another way, a pound of ice takes up more room than a pound of water; therefore, a given bulk of ice is lighter than the same bulk of water. It is because of this provision of nature that ice floats instead of sinking.

If the ice should sink to the bottom of a lake or stream, new ice would form at the top and sink in its turn, and so on until the entire body of water be come frozen.

No summer heat could thaw it through, and very easily we can see that the results would be disastrous to mankind.

Think a bottle of water which has been described was on a shelf near a window, and a little lower than the sill. It is probable that the cold first attacked the water immediately beneath the sash. The crystallized particles took the direction of least resistance, and made their way upwards. As they emerged from the bottle they continued until the column of ice, as described, was formed.

Does this theory cover the case? If not, can some scientist account for the phenomenon?—Willis Kenyon, in Youth's Companion.

Little Ned's Queer Pet.

Ned is just six, and is an authority on pets. He has had any number of dogs, cats, a pet pony, and a family of rabbits have helped to destroy the domestic peace at Ned's home, but now he is very indifferent to all his pets but one—and such a one! He is a companion and confidant for his small master, and such a very dignified companion—as different from romping Carlo or frisky Fido. This new pet is a tall and stately rooster with the name "Sherlock" for his own. Did you ever hear of the pride of the barnyard as a pet? Well, that is exactly what Sherlock is. He walks as stiffly down the street with his young master as he does on the barnyard fence, and when the door is shut on him, turns with a troubled little chuckle and walks home.—N. Y. Advertiser.

Sent Canal Two Thousand Years Ago.

The idea of a canal to connect the water route of the great Suez was considered practicable and excavations were actually commenced upwards of 2,500 years ago, and in the time of the reign of Ptolemy Philadelphus, 273 years before the Christian era, a canal of 62 miles was perfected. The canal was a small affair, of course, compared with the present one, but was sufficient for the war galleys of the time. It is a historical fact that Cleopatra, after Actium, tried to escape by that route, but was prevented by the fierce Arabs.

His Income.

"I am glad, my son," said the loving mother of the failing young student, as she fondly stroked his head, "that you have done so well. How much money do you expect to make next year?"

"Well, mother," replied the talented youth, "I suppose it is hard to tell, but I am sure of twenty-four hundred dollars. You see," he continued, gaily pressing his mother's hand, "I have just got the order for one six hundred dollar cantata."—Truth.

A Faint Hope.

Mr. Manhattan Beach (who has sworn off)—Doctor, I stepped on a banana peel and received a pretty hard fall. I am afraid I have broken my wrist.

Dr. Jones—Let me see. No, there is no broken bones. Just bathe your wrist in whisky four or five times a day and you will be all right.

Mr. Beach—Doctor, hadn't I better be careful for internal injuries, too?—Texas Siftings.

Didn't Want the Ears.

Little Dick—Mamma gave me a big cake, and said I should give you half. Let's play a game with it.

Little Girl—All right.

Little Dick—Well, let's sit down, and I'll take this end and bite, and the longest will get the whole cake.—Good News.

No Wonder.

Democratic Nominations.

For President,
GROVER CLEVELAND.
of New York.

For Vice-President,
ADLAI E. STEVENSON,
of Illinois.

VOTE FOR CLEVELAND.

A Harrison and Reid banner has been stretched across Malden Lane, New York, bearing, with the candidates names, sundry mottoes as indicative of party measures, such as Protection, Reciprocity, High Wages, etc. Very pretty terms, but exceedingly frail argument on behalf of political Republicanism.

PROTECTION.

That is old Monsieur Tomson come again in tattered garb. Who are the happy recipients of Republican protection under McKinley tariffism, that perfect legal embodiment of industrial and laboring classes, not legitimate business interests, not general prosperity, not agriculture and commerce, but a set of pampered millionaires of the Carnegie school, and unscrupulous combines who yearly secure enormous wealth out of the toil and necessities of the people, and are ready and willing to liberally contribute to the campaign funds to defeat any side-issued protection permanent. They are the protected gentlemen.

RECIPROCITY.

That is another political dodge and of singular character because so far as it goes it is free trade pure and simple, the very essence of odious invective Republican editors and orators have exhausted themselves endeavoring to hurl against the Democratic party, and furthermore, it was attached to the McKinley bill through the personal influence of a statesman named James G. Blaine, now lamentably crushed by the Harrisonian wing of Republicanism.

HIGH WAGES.

What absurdity! For Republicans to talk about high wages in the face of the actual results of their legislative action is certainly casting discredit upon popular intelligence. The McKinley tariffites promised to increase wages, but have not done so in a single instance, except the paying of $5 a day to Pinkerton's troops, while on the contrary efforts have been constantly exerted to cut down wages, and as a consequence, numerous strikes and labor difficulties unfortunately prevail throughout the land.

POLITICAL HONESTY.

A WORTHY CHAMPION.

The laboring classes of this country may well be congratulated upon having such an intelligent and devoted champion as Master Workman Powderly. He is a brainy and courageous man as the following letter to President Harrison evidences:

SCRANTON, PA., JULY 14, 1892.

BENJAMIN HARRISON, PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

DEAR SIR:—On the 6th of this month a vessel sailing upon the Monongahela river, a navigable stream in this State, carried a number of Pinkerton men to the city of Homestead. The armed force sailed upon a vessel flying the flag of the United States. It is said that the vessel is the property of the United States Government. That number of men opened fire upon the citizens of Homestead, and several of the citizens were shot to death. Later this force of men opened fire upon the citizens of Homestead, and several of the citizens were shot to death.

The Governor of this Commonwealth did not order these troops to go to Homestead; they were not acting under any lawful authority of the State or of any county or municipality within the State, and until the Governor of this Commonwealth shall, in his capacity as Commander-in-Chief of the National Guard, had called upon the Commander-in-Chief of the armies of the United States for armed assistance, no armed body of men had the right to invade Pennsylvania or make war upon its citizens or residents.

As a citizen of the United States I respectfully call upon you to order an investigation into the methods employed to make use of the United States vessel in conveying an illegally constituted body of armed men to the city of Homestead on July 6. I feel constrained to fully submit that whoever usurped the function of the Executive in the use of the armies of the United States in ordering these troops to invade Pennsylvania is guilty of treason, and should be punished accordingly.

May I ask that you lend your aid, to the end that justice may be established and that the rights of the citizens of this Commonwealth may be respected in the future.

Respectfully yours,
T. V. POWDERLY.

It is a fact that the vessel used to transport an unlawfully armed body of Pinkertons was the property of the United States Government, to know by whose authority consent was given becomes a question of high importance.

Carnegie has a nice job supplying the Government with steel armor. Does he at the same time own Uncle Sam's entire flotilla.

A Dangerous Fire Started and Saved by Chance.

J. E. Flannery's wagon shops on East Third street had a narrow escape from fire Friday night. Some old rags were set burned up near by during the day and the fire in them was supposed to have gone out. But during the night a wind sprung up, stirred the dead ashes of the top and a lot of live coals over on Mr. Flannery's roofs. This state of affairs was discovered in time or another fire would have been charged against "unknown incendiaries".

A Wonderful Machine.

There is no doubt that man is a fine mechanician, but like every other machine he wears off by friction. It is said he is born again every two or three years. His body is constantly renewed by food. To retard this wasting away is practically saving at a most extreme age the ability to be employed process that it takes a long time to consummate. The preparation of Hollister's Rocky Mountain Tea by purging with Hollister's Pills that a cure may, as it were, be made in two or three days, and the change in the mechanism is such that the worn out part is replaced by the new without the usual running down of the entire machine. You can be your own doctor for pennies. Purge away with Hollister's Pills the old tissue and worn out body, and you are purely and healthfully normal, and safe to take at any time.

A MEMORABLE SCENE IN MADISON SQUARE GARDEN.

QUOTATIONS TO THE TWO LEADERS.

Mr. Cleveland and Mr. Stevenson Officially Informed of the Action of the Chicago Convention—Address of Chairman Wilson and Response of Mr. Cleveland—Answer of Mr. Stevenson to the Notification Speech of Mr. Wilson—Cleveland Also Comes in for a Share of the Honors—Reception at the Manhattan Club.

NEW YORK, July 21.—The first democratic gun of the Autumn campaign of 1892 was touched off last night in Madison Square Garden in the presence of a vast assemblage. The huge auditorium was packed from pit to dome, and, as the place holds 19,000 persons comfortably, it is consequently that almost twice that number were present.

The occasion that brought this vast throng together was the notification ceremonies of the two leaders of the Democratic party—Grover Cleveland and Adlai E. Stevenson.

As early as 6 o'clock the crowd began gathering about the doors, and at 7:30 p. m., when the doors were opened, the streets about the Garden were filled with a pushing, struggling, perspiring mob, which fought its way into the building amid the roaring sound of a cataract. Never had the Garden held such a crowd nor such enthusiasm been displayed. The immense room was commanded to the utmost degree; the enthusiastic Democracy, farming, after the seats were filled, in line so dense that breathing became difficult. The galleries were handsomely decorated with flags and bunting, the colors of which were brought into strong relief by the brilliant light from 2,000 electric lamps. This, with the cheering, the waving of hats and upturned faces, presented a memorable scene and one never to be forgotten. Previous to the exercises Chauncey M. Depew, after a strains of sweet music to which the huge, perspiring crowd listened in a philosophical manner, at the same time endeavoring to keep cool by swinging fans and handkerchiefs.

The platform was placed at the South end across one side of the building. Over it was an immense sounding board. In the centre of this were two national flags placed one above the other, written in innumerable small, gilt letters, were the words "Cleveland and Stevenson."

The platform had a seating capacity for 750 persons, but it had a thousand put in it before the central figures, in one of the most brilliant tableaux New York has seen in many months, appeared. The crowd gave a hysterical cheer, the band broke in blowing its feelings every few minutes by rounds of applause as some familiar figure appeared on the platform. A final pause, during those periods of enthusiasm, one could hear the whole auditorium was composed of men, but after the troubled air was quelled, the band seemed to emerge from it in bewildering summer costumes, smiles and the inevitable fan.

Mrs. Cleveland and party entered a box about 8 o'clock and this gave the crowd a chance to give vent to some of their pent up enthusiasm. Quiet had scarcely been restored when a tremendous cheer again broke out, and there was a universal waving of hats, handkerchiefs, canes and fans. Then John M. Bowers, escorting Adlai E. Stevenson, appeared. Mr. Stevenson gracefully acknowledged the plaudits with a bow. Gov. Flower followed, then the whole staff of honorary aides, Commissioner Gilroy, William C. Whitney, the Manhattan Club, the Stock Exchange and the Consolidated Exchange, Lotos Club, Orlando B. Potter, Congressman Bourke Cockran, Police Commissioner Martin, Benjamin Wood, Henry Villard, Fire Commissioner Purroy, Frederick R. Coudert, Jr., Bourke Cockran, Hilary Abner, D. D. Babcock, Evan Thomas and Police Justice Voorhis.

The concert pitch of enthusiasm was reached at 8:15 o'clock when Mr. Cleveland entered. Mr. Cleveland looked impressive with the magnitude of the gathering and the wondrous ovation. He bowed as each and every man and woman stood on their feet applauding in the most enthusiastic manner. He bowed his thanks again and again, but the din and noise continued for fully eighteen minutes. Chairman Wilson of the Notification Committee, Nicholas M. Bell, then quietly stepped out and the hush was allowed to be silent. It was, however, a fruitless task, and nothing was left but to begin the exercises. Colonel Dan of West Virginia approached the rostrum, and Chairman Wilson arose to listen to the speech of notification. Mr. Wilson said, in part:

Mr. Cleveland:

"We bring you, to-night, a message from the Democratic National Convention. Commissioned from its National Convention representing the political sentiment of the Democracy of the United States, we have come to you to give you official notification that you have been selected as the candidate of the party for President of the United States.

"We are also charged with the duty of presenting you the platform of principles adopted by that convention, and to ask from you your full and explicit declaration of the position of the National Democratic party on the several political issues of the day; but in all its utterances it is merely a reaffirmation of the old principles, that whatever governments and laws are made for a people must be for the good of the people, without precedence of sections or classes or interests.

"We believe that a government administered in the spirit of such a constitution will best secure a larger measure of freedom and prosperity than has ever been attained by any people in the world, and that it will be an enduring government. We believe that a government which remains true to the principles of such a constitution will remain in victory to the party which stands upon them, and will secure the confidence and respect of the people, and will continue to endure. To make and keep such a government—to secure within its limits the largest liberty and strength—to bear our freedom safely along in the march of our national progress, unharmed by foreign influence, and to secure for that progress—this is the high and glorious duty of the American people.

"It is a dangerous time for a political party to undertake to administer the laws of a country called it into being has been accomplished. It is a time of unrest and danger. Of the discontent against which we contend has already found, in the revolt of the people, its voice in the powers which everywhere strive to secure supreme power for their own advantage. Of the present patience of that party it may truly be said that they all look to the continuation of wealth in favored classes. Against both tendencies we shall maintain the cause of the people.

"In this great contest your party has ever stepped you to be its leader. Four years ago in the National Convention at Chicago you were named by the highest honors your countrymen could bestow, and you led that party to victory. Your administration was conducted in the interests of the highest conscientious that history can award, and you could make no terms with those who wished to introduce the principles of class, or those who wished to perpetuate the power of wealth. You could not be false to your trust, and you could not betray your party. You will be true to it in the future as in the past, and you will lead it to victory.

"We now ask you and John Adlai Stevenson, whom you have chosen as your associate, to accept the nomination of the Democratic party for the offices of President and Vice-President of the United States, and to lead the party in the coming struggle, and that with the same confidence that we could not find you will lead us to a glorious victory through, and the voters of our country to enjoy the blessings of a pure and patriotic government."

Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen:

I cannot too earnestly express my appreciation of the honor conferred upon me by the great delegated assembly which you officially represent. The platform adopted by the National Democratic Convention as its declaration of principles and purposes receives my ultimate might well as proud, I would desire to be able to express adequately my sense of gratitude for the unanimous manner in which the delegates of the Convention, by the acclamations of the people, have ratified the deliberations of the Convention.

"We are also charged with the duty of presenting you the platform of principles adopted by that convention, and to ask from you your full and explicit declaration of the position of the National Democratic party on the several political issues of the day; but in all its utterances it is merely a reaffirmation of the old principles, that whatever governments and laws are made for a people must be for the good of the people, without precedence of sections or classes or interests.

Mr. Cleveland then arose and Mr. Wilson said: "Mr. Cleveland, I have the honor to present to you Mr. Stevenson, the candidate for Vice-President of the United States, and the chairman of the committee on the instructions of the National Convention by which it was appointed, is present to notify you of your appointment."

Mr. Stevenson gracefully acknowledged the plaudits with a bow. Gov. Flower followed, then the whole staff of honorary aides, Commissioner Gilroy, William C. The wedding was a charming one, the bride's sweet young face making a very handsome couple. The best man was Walter N. Martin, and the bridesmaid was Miss Mina Frame, sister of the groom. The Rev. Cornelius Schenck officiated. The happy couple boarded the 11:28 train for Albany, where they will stay for a few days. Among those present at the wedding ceremony and the reception that followed were: James E. Martine, Mr. and Mrs. A. P. Hetfield, Mr. and Mrs. David Hayes, Miss Lida Hayes, Mrs. L. Rhymers and Wonders Defined.

A striking tale, of absorbing interest, is told in the July number of that valuable monthly magazine Lippincott's, in the complete novel entitled "The Martlet Seal", by Mrs Jeanette H. Walworth. These complete novels are a great feature of Lippincott's, which is the favorite magazine at all firesides where it once has been read. But besides this longer story, there is an abundance of other fiction, and any quantity of matter on all topics of interest. The August number is especially bright, and is most profusely illustrated by talented artists. The department called "As It Seems" discusses the popular sentiment wasted on prisoners to the forget-fulness of the "unknown poor"; and, always reasonable, ably determines the distinction between a Mugwump and a Wobbler.

To Make the Driveway Safe.

A committee of the Union county board of freeholders went to a point near Springfield, Friday, to investigate a dangerous spot known as "Diamond Hill", where along the roadway there is a deep gully fully 150 feet long. Heretofore the township authorities have always attended to the place, but by an act of the last legislature the matter now falls on the freeholders. In order to have the driveway safe, the board will not at its next meeting erect a fence along the road. This will be cheap, as it will cost only about twenty cents a foot, and it may save thousands of dollars which might otherwise be lost by accidents.

Husband and Wife to Part.

Patrick McGovern and his wife have agreed to separate. They have for some time been living together amid domestic ills, and yesterday Pat was arrested for disorderly conduct on complaint of his wife. Judge Codington suspended sentence today, on McGovern's promise not to molest the woman any more.

SETTLING A CHURCH DISPUTE

ARBITRATION ADJUSTS THE BAPTISTS' DIFFICULTIES.

No Legal Bar Found Indebtedness to the Contractors Who Built the Park Avenue House of Worship, But on a Matter of Christian Equity the Investigation Committee Recommend Congregational Reimbursement for the Builders' Loss.

The Park Avenue Baptists feel that they have been relieved of a burden from the charge that they have long owed and refused to pay a just debt to the builders of their new church edifice; and point to the developments at a church meeting held last night as complete vindication of their Christian probity.

The unpleasant accusations against the church were set afloat at the time of the resignation of the Rev. Asa Reed Dutts from the pastorate, several months ago, when it was claimed that the church owed a debt of honor to contractors Stimson & Stewart, and that pastor Dutts's resignation was because the church refused to discharge that debt.

So notorious did the church become as the result of the stories in circulation, that it was deemed wise to take decisive steps towards settling the matter beyond all dispute. Consequently, at a regular church meeting on March 9, a committee of investigation was appointed, consisting of mayor Alexander Gilbert, representing the building committee; Henry B. Newhall, representing the carpenter contractors, and Martin E. Conger, Morgan S. Taylor and Chas. W. McCutchen, representing the Park Avenue church.

That committee organized with Mr. Gilbert chairman, and Mr. McCutchen as secretary, and made a most rigid investigation. The result of its labors was contained in a full report submitted to the Park Avenue congregation Wednesday. The report was considered at a special business meeting of the church, held at the close of the regular Wednesday evening prayer meeting.

After fully reviewing the details of the investigation, the committee declare their unanimous conclusions as follows:

First—That the Park Avenue church, as a corporate body, has discharged in full its obligations and indebtedness to the contractors Stimson & Stewart (bearing date August 27, 1890) and that the said Stimson & Stewart have no legal claim on said church for any account whatsoever in connection with said contract.

Second—That in the adjustment of the differences (preliminary to the final settlement) between the church and the carpenter contractors named, there is to amounts charged extra work and deductions for work not done and like matters, due allowance was sought to be taken by either party of the other. That the chairman of the building committee, Gilbert Gilbert, having the interests and funds of the church in his hands to invest, and charged by duties of those interests, while, on the other hand, the contractors sought property what they believed to be their due, and that the sum of material furnished, and that concessions were made by both parties. That the mutuality-ness of the claims paid by the building committee to and accepted by the contractors was all that they could claim of them from the church in equity, and the final settlement thus made and entered into by the parties was just and fair.

Third—That the Park Avenue Baptist church, as a corporate body, is responsible in full all the moral obligations belonging to it in connection with and under the contract in the erection of its house of worship.

Concerning the personal questions involved, the committees heartily approve the action of the building committee and contractors, and conclude with the following statement and recommendation:

It is in evidence that the carpenter contractors were induced to enter into the execution of the church edifice under the contract, it was, nevertheless an enterprise of greater magnitude than they at first conceived it to be when they entered their estimate in competition with other bidders. At any rate, it proved to them an unprofitable transaction. It is due to this explanation that this fact should be known to them after their agreement for final settlement with the building committee, and was accepted by them in writing, fellow members of the church, they received expressions of appreciation of their services from individuals enough to justify them in expecting their loss would be made good, in part or in whole. These assurances were unquestionably made in good faith, but they could not be enforced at law or collected by process of suit against the church which had not authorized them. Perhaps the disappointment which resulted from the failure to realize the reasonable expectations of the carpenters have entertained.

In view of these facts, and of the peculiar circumstances of the relations of those building to the church, the committee recommend that the few hundred dollars' loss sustained by Messrs. Stimson and Stewart (my not exceeding two hundred dollars) be made good to them by the voluntary contributions of their fellow members of the church, on the ground of disbursing as an obligation, but on the broader basis of Christian fellowship, and in recognition of the claim which a brother or member of the church has upon his brethren for considerate and generous conformation to the golden precept of our best religion laid down by St. Paul in his words to the church at Rome: "Bear ye one another's burdens and so fulfill the law of Christ."

The report was ordered spread in full upon the minutes, and after some discussion the recommendation n of the committee concerning the proposed reimbursement of the contractors was referred to a board of trustees of the church for action.

Alfred W. Day, T. I. Benyon and Fred Smith were appointed a committee to prepare a memorial thanking the investigating committee for its work.

After saying a number of unkind things about newspapers in general, and in particular denouncing as utterly false the story that appeared in the Somerset street sheet concerning the church troubles, the brothers and sisters decided that it would be a very nice thing to have the horrid newspapers say something kind about them, and ordered the church clerk to furnish each of the Plainfield papers with a copy of the investigating committee's report together with the action of the church concerning it. This proposition was discussed earnestly and at considerable length. A number urged that the matter should therefore be left to the board of trustees, but the majority finally decided to ask the newspapers to print in full just what the clerk was authorized to furnish them. All agreed to be agreed that the church should not pay anything for the great extent of valuable space that would thus be occupied, but all appeared earnestly anxious to have the papers say a good word for them, though they had anything but good words for the papers. The matter waxed of longer, whether or not and ungenerous ill-feeling, was developed during the spirited debate of the evening. THE PRESS forbears to publish, out of charity and kindly feeling for the good people of the church.

Pastor Dutts Upheld.

[New York World.]

In the report submitted last night they completely exonerate both the church and the builders, while they practically uphold pastor Dutts in his remonstrating that the church pay a certain amount to the builders to reimburse them for their losses on the contract for building the new church.

[Monmouth Monday Morn.]

While the report exonerates the church from technical debt, it puts the matter in exactly the same light as that urged by the late pastor.

PLAINFIELD'S NEW PASTOR.

He Runs a Great Fellow Before His Church—Incidents of His Career.

The Rev. Henry T. Miller, whose acceptance of the call to the pastorate of the First Presbyterian church of Plainfield has already been published in these columns, will be heartily welcomed by the people of New Jersey's Greatest city when he takes up his work. He is the son of the late Rev. Dr. Miller, who received the Plainfield call, that he was very happy over the church's kindly attention of the past few months.

"A short time ago"—he said—"a call was extended to me from South Brunswick, Ill., but I declined it on account of my wife's health. The sea breeze, I think, would benefit her greatly, and for that reason I shall in all possibility go to Plainfield, which is a short distance from the Atlantic coast. The church at Plainfield has a fine fixture before it. It is one of the most desirable fields in that section of the country. They have a beautiful building, and the congregation is united. I am greatly pleased with the call."

The Herald, in announcing the news of the call, said:

"Mr. Miller preached at Plainfield June 26th and July 3d, and the members of the Presbyterian church was so delighted with him that a meeting was called at once to consider the matter of extending a call to him. At 9 o'clock yesterday morning Mr. Miller received a telegram from the trustees of the church offering him the pastorate at a salary much in excess of that which he at present receives.

"The Rev. Mr. Miller came to Chicago nearly three years ago from Lockport, N. Y. He took charge of the Sixth Presbyterian church when it was only a chapel and the membership was less than 100. Under his pastorate the church has a membership of 500 and built one of the prettiest churches in the city. His health failed and he was compelled to go abroad. He was gone a year in Europe, and upon his return he supplied the Fort Street church at Detroit, Mich., for one year. A call was extended him by that church, but on account of his health he could not accept it. He then went to California and one year's residence there restored to him his old-time vigor.

"Upon his return to Chicago four years ago he accepted a call from the Fifth Presbyterian church, and has been its pastor ever since. By his indefatigable labors the membership has increased greatly and in addition to this he has built a handsome new church. A delightful state of harmony exists in the congregation, and there will be genuine sorrow a. Mr. Miller's departure."

Pastor Miller is a graduate of the Fellowship of Lakeside, and of Auburn Theological seminary. His parents were Methodists, he was graduated from a Baptist institution, and turned out a Presbyterian. This he happily speaks of as a case of the survival of the fittest. He is a preacher of power, and a pastor whose every qualities of the best. He will endear himself to the entire people.

Dr. Pierson, now of Spurgeon's Tabernacle in London, was the pastor whose call Mr. Miller will take at the Fort Street church in Detroit.

TWO SIDES TO THE STORY.

Mr. Martin Tells His Version of the Addie Case.

Counter-suit is about to be brought against Wm. Addie, by Fred H. Martin, as the outcome of the trouble caused between these two former friends by a disputed account. Mr. Martin says that at their last meeting Mr. Addie was the first to show anger, that he was first assaulted by Mr. Addie, being struck under the ribs on the left side, and that it is a lie that Addie struck him about at his (Martin's) face that he (Martin) threw up his hand and it came in on tact with Addie's eye and eyebrow. Mr. Martin is a very slight built man, and never has enjoyed robust health. He has been under a physician's care ever since the unfortunate occurrence. He intends in a few days to begin prosecution of Mr. Addie for assault. He keenly feels the position he has been placed in and the publicity of the matter. His opinion until the matter has been ventilated by the courts.

Sacks Satisfaction for Protested Checks.

A retail liquor dealer named Sack, doing business at 20 Park place, New York, is on the warpath against John M. Schorb, jr. His chance is that Schor; got him to cash two checks which proved to be worthless. He asked justice Nash to issue a warrant for forgery, but that official showed that if there was any crime it was that of larceny, since the checks bore Schorb's own signature, but *rather obtaining money under false pre*tenses. He told Nash he must get secretary of state Baker to sign the warrant before he could issue a warrant. Nash went in search of the evidence, and has n't yet returned. He says 'Tis make Schorb sweat if it costs me $1,000".

The Street Commissioner Lost His Hat.

The Trinity excursion to Asbury Park Wednesday was a most enjoyable event. The only accident of the day was Robert Meeker's loss of his hat. He was smoking on a car platform, on the going trip, when Councilman Wm. G. E. See of this city, ignore wishing a pleasant home-like reception to Plainfield's guests, decided that it would be a very nice thing to have the horrid newspapers say something kind about them, and ordered the church clerk to furnish each of the Plainfield papers with a copy of the investigating committee's report together with the action of the church concerning it. This proposition was discussed earnestly and at considerable length. PLAINFIELD ON TOP FOR GOOD.

Last Night Her Men Whipped Rahway, and Won't Lead Now to the End.

Those who have seen much ball playing by the big league teams of New York, Philadelphia and Boston, this season, and many just such games as that which "occurred" at Elizabeth Saturday. All teams have to have at least one off day and Plainfield's off day fell on Rahway's game just at the right time—when they were fortunate enough to win.

It was awful pitiful ball. Even Elizabeth's league caliber made two fatal errors in succession that let in three runs. Francis, too, was bad at critical times—giving five bases on balls, two of which forced in runs, and in the last inning on a simple error he let Turner home with the "tieing" run and Leidy to first, where he came in with the winner on Bonner's three-bagger. Just think, also, of six errors for Williams and Murray at third base and short stop!

The Rahways were yellow at first. The total of errors was ten, six of which were in the out field. Everybody was off except Jones, Daley and Hufford. "Tuck" Turner, the pitcher who came near losing the game, eventually won it. He made a none run in the fifth inning, and a three run in the sixth that sent Hufford and Daley in and took himself where he could sneak home on an error and save the game. There were no base hits in all, Rahway giving up seven, and not six, yet still he did n't pitch much of a game. He has got back his control of the ball since the accident to his finger, but he is not nearly as swift as he once was. Yesterday. He should be seen all through the game shaking his head at Hufford's signal for a speedy ball. Time and time again he would get the ball over on a man and then lose the put out with a slow ball. Hasmill, who has won games many times this season, was poor yesterday. He had three errors in right field, two of which resulted in runs, he could n't hit because he was too anxious and he was left out of the game just like Hufford and Murphy were last Wednesday.

Lufbery and Hughes, Elizabeth's new men, made three hits, and otherwise conducted themselves like veterans. Each former was greeted with loud applause by the Plainfield spectators when he stepped to the plate. Barry, the clever second baseman, stole bags with impunity and even captured third during Sneeden's long-arm-swing.

The game was won and lost, again and again, first by one team and then by the other. Plainfield got her big lead in the fifth inning in this way: Jones got to Hufford's state of harmony aided in that by Williams. He went around on Sneeden's single and came home on Elizabeth's second error which was by Murray. Hufford got first on a bunt, Daley on a sacrifice that sacrificed Sneeden, and Murphy on a play. The bases were thus filled when Rafferty let fly the only ball that passed him. Hufford and Daley came home before he could get it and Murphy followed on Rafferty's bad throw back to the plate. Jones Turner put it over the fence for a home run.

Elizabeth took her lead in the eighth by four safe hits and errors by every man in the field. Sneeden (2 safe) and Barry (2) wind-up in this way: Hofford was first up. He told his men on the bench that he would get a base on balls and that they must all hit as hard as they could. He did and went to second on Murray's error that let Daley to first. Turner's three-bagger brought them home and he came in on Leidy's little hit that Francis fumbled. That tied the score with Lieby on first and Murphy and Hasmill out Bonner stepped to the plate with a record for the day of no hits, one error and out. He hit the seco d ball pitched so far out of reach that Leidy came way home from first and Bonner himself rounded within ten feet of the plate before the ball was returned. The score:

AN INSURANCE EMBEZZLER.

A Former Plainfield Agent Goes Astray With the Company's Funds.

[Inter Ocean Bos.]

It leaked out last Saturday that William J. Rouse, who has been in charge of the office of the United States Insurance company in this place, had suddenly disappeared, leaving his wife and three small children behind him, together with some unpaid bills. His wife, who appears to be greatly distressed over the affair and not the slightest idea of the where abouts of the missing man. There are rumors that he is short in his accounts, but what he has been charged, could not be learned. It is also said that he was once short in his accounts with the Prudential company at Plainfield. At last accounts he had not been heard from.

—There seems to be much opposition, among Park Avenue church members, against adopting the recommendations of the building committee and paying any sum whatever to the carpenter contractors.

EXTENDING THE WATER SERVICE.

Plainfield's Supply Company Perfecting its Work in the County.

The section of the Union Water company's mains between Mill Rock and the station of the Central Railroad company at Roselle has been completed, and the contractors have resumed work in Cranford, at a point a short distance east of Oakland. The main will be laid from its present terminus at Oakland to the station at Cranford, within ten days, and filled with water from the pumping station at Netherwood. This will leave only the section between the Cranford and Belle stations to be laid. The company expects to be able to supply water to parties residing along the line of its main between Nether wood and Elmora within a month. It is said that the pressure will be sufficient to throw water at Cranford more than a hundred feet high, merely from the stand-pipe, and when pumping directly into the mains. Numerous applications for water have already been made to the company. With a fine telford road, electric lights and plenty of wholesome water, Cranford and neighboring towns require nothing but drainage in order to be equipped with all the conveniences and luxuries of cities. All of these great public improvements have so far been obtained without running into debt, except for small portion of the cost of the county roads.

MAY PLAINFIELD GET IT!

A Republican Silver Trophy is the Championship Prize for the Fastest Cyclers.

The Elizabeth Journal trophy, for which all of the cycle clubs of Union county are competing, is now on exhibition in the window of H. J. Bauer, jeweler, 130 Broad street, Elizabeth.

As soon as it was in position and properly placarded it drew a crowd of interested spectators, and many were the complimentary expressions heard from all sides.

The trophy is of silver, gold lined. It is in the form of a large vase, with cover, and heavy antique handles. On the top of the cover stands a bicycler, just ready to mount the wheel in front of him, and on a burnished panel in the front is a wheelman on a pneumatic safety, speeding along at the top of his speed. The vase is largely of what is known as "satin finish", but is rich in scroll work and tasteful decoration.

On the base beneath the body of the bowl is the following inscription:

Elizabeth Journal Trophy for the Bicycle Championship of Union County, New Jersey.
Team Road Races.

The vase rests on a hard wood base, and stands in all twenty-two inches in height.

The trophy will be exhibited at Mr. Bauer's store for some little time, and will then be exhibited in other parts of Elizabeth, and probably in Westfield, Rahway and Plainfield, so that all who are interested in the bicycle races and the bicycle racers may have an opportunity to see the beautiful emblem of the championship of Union county.

"When the boys see this"—said an enthusiastic ten cent rider yesterday—"they will all be inspired to ride faster than ever before so as to capture it."

And it is sincerely hoped that this may be the effect on all who will compete for the championship.

THAT COUNTY SEWER.

Impracticable for Plainfield, But the Towns Beyond the Fanwood Hill Approve It.

A joint session of the sewer committees of Plainfield, Fanwood, Westfield and Elizabeth was held in this city Thursday, for the purpose of forwarding the plans for the county sewer project. Plainfield was opposed to the scheme on account of its difficulties, which amount almost to impossibilities so far as this city is concerned, on account of the hill over which the sewage would have to be forced. Nothing definite was arrived at, but various plans were informally di cussed. One of the councilmen interested said that Plainfield soon develop a practicable plan for itself which would be heartily approved by all. The citizens' committee is constantly at work on the matter, and is progressing as rapidly as such a weighty problem permits.

THE WAR OF THE WOMEN.

The Towns Widow Wins the Day, and Nora Pouts the Cows.

Mary J. Tharp secured her revenge upon Nora Edmunson on Saturday, when Nora was convicted of the charges made against her by Mary and was fined $10 and punishment of the offense. The story of the trouble between the two women was told in these columns exclusively, last Tuesday, and that story was all but rehearsed at the trial of the case Saturday. Mrs. Tharp, an attractive young widow, repeated all the shameful charges made by Nora and her good women, neighbors of the parties at war, corroborated her. Nora and a laidfriend said that Mary had started the row by the abuse of Nora. Mr. Tharp testified that Nora had used language that ought never to be used by anyone, no matter what the provocation, and took the fine she must pay the fine or go to jail for 10 days. She said she would raise the money.

A Sabbaday System for Plainfield in View.

(From The Press of July 14.)

The members of the common council committee on sewers will meet this evening and listen to the views of those from the towns concerned and interested in the matter of a trunk-line sewer through Fanwood, Westfield, Cranford, etc., to Staten Island sound.

Major Gilbert, who is taking the most intense interest in the question of how to dispose of Plainfield's sewage, is determined, as are others, that such plan is not practicable for this city. The entire sewage of this city would first have to be taken to one point by gravity, which point would probably of necessity be at least 90 feet below the top of the Fanwood hills and the carrying of it over such elevation would be very expensive if not impossible.

The mayor and the Plainfield committee, however, have a plan proper and practicable for this city, all ready to present at an early meeting of the council.

—The street railway dynamo is now in position at the Plainfield electric light station, ready for work.

SENT ON HER MOTHER'S COMPLAINT.

Mollie Stevens is only fifteen years of age, but she has long been known to the police as a lively kind of a girl, and some time ago served a sentence of 10 days in jail. She has given her mother considerable trouble from time to time, by her waywardness, and has been in the habit of going to strange cities for a week or two whenever she pleased.

Friday night she returned home from one of her personal absences, in company with the Roughhenhausen girls. Her greeting at home was cordial, but she proceeded to give evidence of her filial devotion by calling her mother wicked names and hearing teacups and other crockery at her head. The overburdened mother resented this conduct, and decided that the only way to curb this frolicsome disposition in the girl was to put her in the hands of the police. Therefore Mollie was arrested, and spent the night on the narrow cot of a cell in the women's department of the luxurious local lockup. She was very brazen and defiant in judge Codington's presence Saturday, and was speedily committed to the county jail for 60 days. A large number of young women called to see Mollie in the corridor and expressed their sympathy in familiar and endearing terms.

FAMOUS GENERALS.

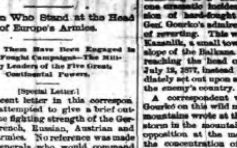
The Men Who Stand at the Head of Europe's Armies.

Most of Them Have Been Engaged in Hard-Fought Campaigns—The Military Leaders of the Five Great, Continental Powers.

[Special Letter.]

In a recent letter in this correspondence I attempted to give a brief outline of the fighting strength of the German, French, Russian, Austrian and Italian armies. No reference was made to the generals who would command these great armies in case of war. In fact, it is difficult to tell the names of the men who would be placed in chief command.

Germany, whose generals achieved such glorious victories in the Franco



COUNT VON WALDERSEE.

German campaign of 1870-71, will, in the coming conflict, have to depend on comparatively second men. Should Emperor William should issue a special order the command of the German armies will be in the hands of Count von Waldersee, the present commander in chief. Waldersee is a comparatively young man, being but 51 years of age. He was a particular favorite of Von Moltke, who had unbounded faith in the young soldier's capacity and judgment. Moltke has, however, never had an opportunity to show his ability in the field. He has served in the war against Denmark in 1864, in the Austrian campaign of 1866 and during the French war was chief of staff to the grand duke of Mecklenburg-Schwerin; but the position he occupied were not important enough to attract public attention. Should Waldersee be superseded, the command would probably be intrusted to Gen. Von Alvensleben, at present commander of the Thirteenth army corps, who made a grand record during the war with France. He is one of the ablest of German tacticians, and, at the same time, a great leader in battle. Emperor William thinks highly of him, and there should be no fear of a special commander in chief he is destined to play a most important part in the military operations of the empire.

GEN. VON ALVENSLEBEN.

Gen. Sausaier, military governor of Paris and commander in chief of the French army, although he made a creditable military record for himself in the war with Germany, is more of a politician than a soldier. He prevented Gen. Boulanger from achieving his coup d'etat a few years ago, and has since been in high favor with the powers that be. Military men pronounce Gen. de Galliffet let the comical man. He is not only the foremost cavalryman in the French army, but immensely popular with the rank and file. During the Franco-German war he performed many deeds of valor. His heroic attack on the Prussian forces at Sedan bears close resemblance to the famous charge of Balaklava. Although it proved just as ineffectual, it showed the same dash and fire of the gallant leader from one end of France to the other. Galliffet began his military career as a private in one of the crack cavalry regiments and worked his way up without relying upon family influence. He is the only really picturesque character among the high officers of the French army. The only real strategist of the republic is Gen. Miribel, who has served in most of the wars in which France has been engaged during the past half century. He was a great admirer of the methods and work of his great antagonist, von Moltke, and reorganized the general staff of his native country on the plan laid down by the silent German. He is chief of the general staff, the highest position in the military establishment of France.

The Austro-Hungarian army is commanded by Archduke Albrecht, a grizzly veteran of many wars and the most noted officer in all Europe. He is assisted by Gen. Beck, who occupies the position of chief of the general staff. The latter is said to be a clever officer, but not capable of originating a grand plan of campaign. He has served in many campaigns, however, and what he may lacked in brilliancy he made up by thorough application to the work before him.

PLAYING COLUMBUS.

He stood on the deck of his canoe
(And that was the navy's high deed),
His face was turned to the shore
The kitchen he roamed with great care.

His crew was a cat and the baby,
In a tub he'd launched the latter out,
And near the great Genoese I am"
Sleeps quietly on the waters, lashed with jam.

"Ah! here are some berries, the sacred!
The land must be near, I'll be sworn."
The baby looked blank, when he shouted:
"Ahoy! See, Columbus, the land!"

Thereupon, with a gentle "au-revoir" dog
Was glad that the voyage was over;
And, striking land on his head,
Was first of the crew upon shore.

The high chair lost none slightly stirred,
And, with a flag-pin on its head,
In spite of his patient discovery,
Columbus was looked on as mad!

THE LYRE BIRD.

An Extraordinary Variety of the Pheasant Described.

In the vast forests of New South Wales, broken up and intersected with rock and ravine, stream and plain, you may still meet, with one of the most beautiful birds known to naturalists, that is, the lyre bird.

Looking at the illustration, it will be seen at once that the form and structure of the tail resembles an ancient Grecian lyre, hence the bird's name. The size of this bird is about that of the common fowl, the eyes are dark hazel, large, said in expression, and very beautiful; the wings short and concave, rendering great assistance when running, but of little use in flight. The bird's running powers are extraordinary, and it is not easily overtaken; the legs are rather long; the color of the body is a reddish brown, and the general appearance is exceedingly graceful. The bird is of gentle disposition and shy, rather harmless.

It is painful to know that the constant destruction of rare and beautiful birds, as well as animals, is going on to an extent almost alarming. The writer is authority for the statement that the lyre bird will soon be lost to the forest. He says that the tail feathers are were formerly sold in Sydney at a low price, but now that the beautiful creatures are nearly exterminated the price has risen greatly. Upon fashion and "sport," even more than the ignorant savage, fall the blame of their destruction, adding that the birds might easily have been domesticated and thus preserved.

THE FUNNY OWL.

It Does All Its Hooting for Food at Night.

Look at this dignified, sober creature, with its eyes shut up to-day in the day time, and wide open at night! This queer bird works just as watchmen do: does all its hooting for mice and other food in the dark.

If you want the rats caught in your barn, owls are better than all the cats in the world.

A live owl in the daylight has his head skewed into his body, and is very stupid; but the moment night comes, his eyes are like living balls of fire, and he is all ready for work.

THE BARN OWL.

Then the feathers of their wings quills slightly turned back, and covered with fine hairs, so that they may fly very quietly. The only way to detect them is the hawk owl. Do you know why? Because it is the only one that flies in the daytime.

They cannot sing like other birds, but make a dismal cry which sounds like "Whit, Whoo!" Even the beautiful snowy owl of Greenland make the winters there lonely and sad with its frightful screams.

Most birds have some fun about them, but the owls haven't a bit.—Mrs. G. Hall, in Our Little Ones.

The Day Had Fallen.

Georgie was taking a walk one damp day, when the fog was so dense that one could not see a yard before him on the sidewalk. After going a few blocks the child said: "Oh, see, the sky is on the sidewalk! we are walking through it."—Harper's Young People.

FACING A BUFFALO.

It Requires a Great Deal of Courage and Coolness.

Romolo Gessi Pasha, in his "Seven Years in the Soudan," describes his first experience in shooting "large game." He had used a gun from boyhood, but had never hunted anything larger than wild goats and deer. Now he was in a buffalo country, and one day a soldier came in to say that he had seen several of the animals in the neighborhood. The temptation was too great, and, in spite of the excessive heat, Signor Gessi, a servant, and the soldier, sallied forth.

We had not gone two hundred steps when I felt the first pangs of buffalo-hating bestride anthills, and taking advantage of the relief, which blew toward us, we slowly approached the animals. When we were within eight paces of them they scented the danger, and the two which were on guard faced their eyes in our direction.

We waited behind a grass-land anthill for half an hour, not daring to move for fear of scaring the game. Then, as the wind was light, we crept behind another anthill a hundred feet away, from which I could shoot sideways, as I supposed, taking advantage of the bushes.

Without being noticed by Hamet, to whom I had explained my intention, I started for the place. When I was halfway between the two anthills I heard a rustling in the grass behind me, before I could call out to him the shot was fired.

PLUCKY BIRDS.

Some Instances of Their Courage and Fighting Qualities.

Birds are not generally considered pugnacious, but there are many instances of their courage and fighting qualities. Some species are more combative than others, and the males are usually more pugnacious than the females. Many species of birds are very courageous in defending their young, and will attack any animal that approaches their nests. Even the timid little wren will fight desperately when its young are threatened, and the robin will attack a cat or dog that comes near its nest. Many species of birds are very pugnacious during the breeding season, and fight fiercely with their rivals for the possession of the females. Some species are pugnacious at all times, and fight on the slightest provocation. Among these are the game birds, which are always ready to fight, and the domestic cock is the most pugnacious of all birds. Many species of birds are very courageous when attacked by their enemies, and will fight fiercely for their lives. Some species are more courageous than others, and the smaller species are usually more courageous than the larger species. A BURGLAR ELEPHANT.

How Polly Robbed a Grocery Store in a Western Town.

Polly was a cunning old elephant, who belonged to a traveling circus, the property of Barnum, Bailey & Hutchinson, for a night or two in each place. She knew a good many tricks and worked very hard for her living, performing with the clown in the circus every evening, and drawing the caravan along the road next day.

It was not a good show that Polly belonged to, although she was the principal attraction. Perhaps the old girl always got as much to eat as she would have liked. After awhile, as she grew more and more rambling, she began to slip away as night whenever she got the chance. She passed through the dark silent streets with her soft, noiseless footsteps, until she came to a house which her instinct told her was a grocery store. There she would stop, and with her clever, flexible trunk take down the shutters and effect an entrance.

Once inside, she had it all her own way. After a good rummage all round she believed to find out what property retained she would feast until morning on jam, marmalade, biscuits, cheeses and sweets of every kind. Once she ate herself ill, but that was when she ate up a large wedding cake, sugar ornaments and all.

At first she was careful to get back to her stable before daybreak, but at last she got overbold and was on one morning caught in the very act, with the empty tins and jam pots strewn all around her. Her guilty, half-sticky trunk was smeared all over with raspberry jam and gingerbread!

Poor Polly! I am afraid after that her master was obliged to chain her up more securely at night and that her pleasant little rambles were put a stop to for awhile, much against Polly's own wishes.—A. M. Goodhart, in Our Little Ones.

What the Choir Said.

Singers in church and elsewhere are not always as careful as they ought to be to articulate their words distinctly. A little girl entered the meeting house one long-metre hymn was being sung. York Tribune—just as the choir was singing the anthem.

"Mamma, what ugly Hallelujah" said the singers; but the little girl, whose thoughts were somewhat preoccupied, was not to be caught. She didn't catch the words correctly. After getting home she startled her aunt by saying:

"I never saw such a nice choir. They stopped right in the middle of the anthem and spoke to one."

"Why, my dear," said her auntie, "I didn't notice it."

"Well they did. You know I wore my new cloak, and as soon as I came in the choir said: 'Hardly know you! Hardly know you! two or three times."

Doll Fashion Notes.

Dolls' bonnets will be made this season out of straw taken from the hats their little girl mammas used to wear.

Dolls' hats will be trimmed with second-hand hair ribbons.

Mamma dolls will wear fried napkins for shawls.

Baby dolls will wear lace caps made out of old silk mits.—Harper's Young People.

FUN FOR THE BOYS.

Two Experiments Which Are Instructive as Well as Amusing.

A pretty and simple experiment, quite easy to try now that the warm sun has brought so many flowers popping out on their little stems, is to change the colors of cut flowers. And, surely, the delicate as the colors are in their natural hues, they will alter to others as bright and pleasing in the flower. Put five or ten cents' worth of ordinary aqua ammonia in a saucer, stand a small bunch, large ed down, over this, and in the small end insert the flower you wish to change. Then be a little patient and you will see what you will see soon. I shall be glad to hear from the boys and girls who try this pretty trick, if they will write me all that happens. And can anyone tell why it happens?

Another experiment, rather more difficult to try and quite different, is to stand two glasses as nearly alike as possible close together on a wooden table. Fill them about one-quarter full of water, and then pour more water, little by little, into either one or the other until they both give out the same musical note when lightly touched with the blade of a knife. In other words, they must be tuned together. Across the top of one glass place a piece of fine, thin wire, slightly bent at both ends; then make the second glass sing, by rubbing the rim with one wet finger, and in a moment you will see the wire on the first glass dancing and jumping about in a most amusing manner, keeping time to the music and clicking a castanet-like accompaniment the while. One glass vibrates because it is rubbed, the other quivers from sympathy, the water ripples in tiny waves, and the little wire gayly responds to the tune.—Frank Leslie's Weekly.

VEGETABLE COMPASS.

A Plant Which Is of Great Value as the Traveler's Friend.

The compass plant grows in the prairies of western North America, and, as its name indicates, is of great service to the wanderer. It is a dwarf variety of the cuter, of perennial, stinless stem, by a height of three feet six inches and has a bold of yellow flowers.

The leaves help it wonderfully to arrive from the fact that the line passes at the base of the stem, which are placed, one after the other, in a perpendicular, edge-wise and north.

THE MODERN UNICORN.

It Is Fairly Abundant in the Waters of Alaska.

Its Commercial Value, However, Is So Great That It Is Gradually Approaching Extinction.—Habits of the Animal.

The narwhal, or sea unicorn (Monodon monoceros), whose long and screw like tusk is supposed to have been the original of the fabled unicorn of fable and story, is yet fairly abundant in the waters of Alaska, the only part of the United States where, according to the Detroit Free Press, it is found at present.

It disappeared from Europe nearly a century ago, the last one seen in the Germad ocean being in the year 1790.

THE MODERN UNICORN.

and on the British coast in 1800, so the only specimens to be met there now are those that are stuffed and laid on shelves in the various museums.

The sea unicorn, can, at present, be found only in arctic waters, it being comparatively free from fees there and consequently an inexpensive commissariat from which to draw its supplies. Gentle, if not timid, and comparatively defenseless, it is not fitted to fight the battle of life in regions where foes are numerous and the lord of creation can put forth all his power. Nonetheless are killed annually by the Aleuts and Esquimaux and their tusks sold to the captains of the whalers who pay for them in goods and provisions. A tusk is worth all the way from $10 to $50 in American and European markets, but the man who first secures it does not, in all probability, get $5 for the finest specimens.

Most of the narwhal ivory found in the markets of the Atlantic states is imported from Denmark, Copenhagen being the principal shipping point.

An adult narwhal ranges from ten to sixteen feet in length; is blackish in hue, and has the caudal fin and much of the head of the sperm whale. It is inclined to become mottled or whitish as it advances in years, and also more cautious, and difficult of approach and cult to approach and a female with young more so.

It is said to use its teeth at an early age and to be therefore compelled to live on fish which it can easily overtake and can masticate readily, and not to stomp left with which to cut its food. The tusk, which is in reality a solid tooth, extends from the left side of the upper jaw to a length of ten or more feet and is its sole weapon of offense and defense. Fighting not being a prominent trait of its character, it is not compelled to use the latter very often, yet when the occasion arises it can give a Prussian uhlan of the guard a few points in drawing blood.

It is almost irresistible in a charge, owing to its strength, weight and speed, and ally enemy it may hit is likely to receive a mortal thrust, as the point of its lance is very sharp and the blade strong enough to go through a whale.

It has been known to force its tooth through the side of a whaling boat, and more than one man is on record whom it disabled an Esquimaux canoe and made its occupants foe for their lives to a convenient iceberg or broken, floating ice, over which it could not scramble.

It is the only animal known that fights foes with a single tooth and, as it is usually victorious against all of them except man, it deserves much credit for its courage.

The single-toothed creature cannot travel on land, its pectoral fins being rather long and flexible and its tail broad and too bifurcated to be of any use in terrestrial locomotion. Its disappearance from Europe and the greater portion of its continental would indicate that it is doomed to early extinction, and the probability is that it will be as rare as the great auk or dodo within a hundred years from now. A member of the cetaceans, its flesh and fat are appreciated by savages and Esquimaux, while men, so that it has every quality requisite for its early extermination.

Duststorms on the Atlantic.

Ships crossing the Atlantic in the latitude of the Cape Verde islands often encounter duststorms of longer or shorter duration. One of the most remarkable of these paroxysms storms swept down on the German steamer Wagner in the summer of 1886. It lasted for four days, during which time the air was so filled with particles as to make high noonday almost as dark as the blackest midnight. When the storm was at its height the saloon were kept busy shoveling the dust from the steamer's decks. The machinery was made to work with great difficulty, and at one time the captain, J. G. Schroeder, had grave apprehensions that they would be dashed upon the Cape Verde rocks. As mentioned in the opening paragraphs, fragments of dust on the Atlantic, but the above is the only instance of a regular dust blizzard of four days' duration in the memory of the oldest sea captains.

A German living at Potstown, Pa., ate one dozen angle worms on a wager recently. He says he learned to eat them while a lad, and that they are as palatable as raw oysters, especially when eaten with vinegar, pepper and salt.

LIFE IN DAMASCUS.

A City Well Named the "Necklace" of Beauty.

Traveling Along the Road Where Paul Heard the Voice from Heaven—Instructing in the Koran—Street Scenes —The Shooting Dervishes.

[Special Damascus (Syria) Letter]

Damascus is praised by the Arab poets as the "Pearl of the Orient," "The feather from the bird of paradise," "The necklace of beauty," "The eye of the Orient." No wonder such lavish praise is bestowed, for the city is compared with the great Syrian desert, a paradise indeed. A most delightful surprise is it to the traveler to find right up against the broad, uninteresting plain to the west or the desert on the east a region of fertility teeming streams and sparkling fountains, where luxuriant foliage and fragrant flowers delight the eye and charm the senses. Riding into the city one immediately passes the limpid streams of the Barada, the ancient Abana. Rising on the slopes of Anti-Lebanon it divides at Damascus into seven branches, two of which supply the fountains of the city and five irrigate the gardens. You ride between mud walls for some distance with gardens on each side, where the orange, the apricot, the fig, the pomegranate, the quince, the peach and the grape flourish in wonderful profusion. At length the city, with its mosques and towers, is reached, and the wonderful panorama of Oriental life buried Pashas, the favorite wife of the prophet. Here the faithful pearly at start on the pilgrimage to Mecca. Until Cairo took away her greatest scholars Damascus was regarded as the seat of Arabic learning. Like an opal in a setting of emerald lies this interesting old city in its marvelous garden, the attractive center for all Oriental tourists.

The entire Christian world has reason to remember the fanatical outburst of the Mohammedans and Druses in the city of the city. At night around the balcony-trade of the minarets lamps are hung. Morning, noon and night rings out from these towers the call to prayer. "There is but one God and Mohammed is his prophet—to prayer."

"A MILE A MINUTE."

Queer Device for Rapid Traveling Invented by a Michigander.

Prof. Charles Wheeler, of Jacksonville, Mich., has evolved a novel invention for rapid traveling. The latest product of his ingenious brain he has named a unicycle. An idea of the contrivance can, perhaps, be gained from the illustration. The machine is the result of the indignation of Europe that the Turkish government attempted to interfere in the matter. The wheels are the ringleaders were beheaded, and the pasha himself suffered the same fate. A French lady, on learning of the outrages appeared on the scene, and the Muslim felt the aroused sense of the Christian nations. Then the Turkish government and the swift punishment of the murderers.

Oriental life in its motley character and peculiar customs greets us in its real coloring in Damascus. The streets are cleaner there than in most Oriental cities, for the limpid streams are abundant, yet there is too much dirt for our personal comfort. Houses are not seen from the street. There is no front street in the western sense. You go up a dirty alley and if you succeed in getting the entry to a private house you will knock at a wooden gate opening on to the alley; passing through, you are ushered into a court paved with beautifully-colored marbles. In the center is an elegant fountain, around which are trees and flowers. On the south side, opening toward the north, there is usually a lofty open colonnade, with pointed arches called the iwan, heated in the soft couches and forming a delightful summer sitting-room. If your host is a gentleman he will invite you to eat of his divan and coffee will be served you in tiny cups and the nargilleyh, or water pipe, handed you. The harems of many of the Damascene houses is luxurious to the last degree, elegant sculptures, soft divans, fragrant flowers, flowing fountains, singing birds and numerous servants.

The entire city seemed crowded into the bazars. Here is a rare opportunity for the lover of antiques—if this be such. Gay handkerchiefs, silken sashes, daggers, coats of mail, in one corner. In another, the old Persian rugs, many of them ages and their use is prayer rugs. Here opposite brass work of all styles. Here beautiful tables of inlaid pearl, yonder all kinds of brica-brac; further, embroidered silks for all purposes. And traders are worried even in these little cells; the turner sits at his bench holding his shawl in his toes; the weaver drives his shuttle, the confectioner boils his syrups, the coppersmith hammers, the tailor sits cross-legged squats in the midst of his spices, the dry goods merchant seems packed in with his dress goods. Try your hand at bargaining. What is the price of this dagger? Fifteen francs. Too object. He laughs. You protest that it is too dear. He swears by Allah that it will rain blue to take less. Back and forth goes the chaffer. The end comes by that you buy the dagger for two francs and a half, or fifty cents, instead of three dollars, the first price. After awhile every merchant has his first price and his last price. He gives his first price when he is in a hurry, and his last price. This is the method in all the bazars. It is perfectly ridiculous. He will not sell you the article.

PROTECTION PARADOXES.

That taxing an article makes it cheaper.

That making an article cheaper enables its manufacturer to pay higher wages.

That taxing raw material cheapens cost to manufacturers and lowers price to consumers.

That a tariff paying $175,000,000 year into the public treasury does not increase the price of the things taxed to produce this sum.

That foreigners pay the duties, and so largely support our Government, but that out of money to them the Reed-McKinley Congress spent only $1,000,000,000.

That the price of farm produce has gone up under McKinleyism while the cost of living has gone down.

That untaxing foreigners only is "reciprocity."

That high tariffs make high wages in the United States, but leave wages in every principal country in Europe lower than in free-trade England.

That our manufacturers produce staple articles more cheaply than they can be made abroad, but that we need a high tariff to enable them to do it.

That the older the infant industries grow the more protection they need.

That a party having more than 6,000,000 voters, nine-tenths of whom are workingmen, is an "enemy of labor."

That the protected manufacturers pay large sums into the Republican campaign fund, and maintain lobby agents and subsidized newspapers to defend high duties, solely to raise wages in the United States.—N. Y. World.

REFORM.

The Presidential campaign opens auspiciously for the Democratic cause.

The nominations of Cleveland and Stevenson, statesmen of such admitted ability and prudent foresight, meet with popular approval throughout the length and breadth of the land.

And to that must be added a growing and determined hostility on the part of the people to millionaire organizing tariffs, threatened forcible control of elections, and other enormities of public money, measures earnestly sanctioned by such Republican leaders as Harrison and Reid.

The people see the danger lies to individual liberty in such class prosperity and are moving to obliterate it.

They can accomplish the work, for when popular wrath is fanned into activity mercenary conspirators and political demagogues must go under.

The toiling masses are honest.

They are more politically intelligent than ever before.

They can clearly detect the difference between trickery and truth.

Cleveland Reform is their watchword.

HONEST MONEY.

"We hold the use of both gold and silver as the standard money of the country and to the coinage of both gold and silver without discrimination against either metal or charge for mintage, but the dollar unit of coinage of both metals must be of equal intrinsic and exchangeable value, and we demand that all paper currency shall be kept at par with and redeemable in such coin."

That utters the doctrine of the Democratic party and it means a currency sure and undefiled.

A gold dollar and a silver dollar to be each fully worth 100 cents.

Gold and silver to stand upon an even platform.

Both to possess intrinsic value and the same purchasing and debt paying power.

Give the people plenty of such coined money for its Constitutional and Honest.

SAD DEATH OF MISS RANDOLPH.

Brooding Over Affliction Results in Insanity and Death.

Miss Rachel F. Randolph, a maiden lady of about 50 years, died by her own hand Tuesday. Miss Randolph had for years been a member of the Price household at New Brunswick. Two months ago she was informed that she was afflicted with an incurable tumor, and she came to Plainfield to spend a few remaining days quietly at the home of Andrew J. Stewart, 33 West Fifth street, where she could be with friends, Mrs. T. O. Doane. The unfortunate woman brooded constantly over her affliction, until her mind was seriously affected. Her friends early noticed that she was becoming demented, and by advice of Dr. Huff of Rahway, who was sent by Miss Randolph's cousin, Miss Prall, to examine her, preparations were being made for her removal to the asylum.

The poor sufferer's troubles were greater than she could bear, however, and about Tuesday insanity drove her to suicide. She took a sheet from her bed, and wound it three times about the ball bed post and her neck, and hung there so that suffocation ensued.

Wednesday morning Mrs. Stewart went to Miss Randolph's door to summon her to breakfast. There was no response to her repeated callings and knockings, and in alarm she summoned her husband. Together they entered the room, and found that the poor woman had ended her sufferings, and that the body was cold in death.

The deceased was a woman of most estimable qualities, beloved by all who knew her. Only disease and a disordered brain could have prompted her to take her own life.

Rockaway Rooney in Jail.

Dog-catcher Frisbie had packman Patrick Rooney arrested Monday afternoon for assaulting him with a knife as he took out custody in three canines. Rooney resisted examination at the station charge, and furnished bail in $100 before justice Nash for the action of the grand jury.

On the charges of letting his horse run at large and resisting an officer, Rooney will be tried by judge Codington Monday.

GREAT DAMAGE BY STORM.

Six Big Fires by Lightning Within a Radius of Ten Miles—Crops Ruined by Hail.

The storm of wind and rain that broke over this section at 10 o'clock Friday night, was the heaviest that had visited the locality in several years. It was accompanied by the most terrific thunder and lightning. The rain fell in such torrents for nearly an hour, was more like a water-spout than anything else.

At Somerville the gutters and streets, water pipes were totally inadequate in taking off the water, and the principal streets were flooded from curb to curb. On Main street in front of the hotel below the water backed over the sidewalk, and for a time was fully three feet deep, making foot travel impossible. The hailstones which fell during the storm were of unusual measurement from an inch to an inch and a half in diameter. Considerable damage was done by the storm to the truck farms just outside the town. Trees and electric wires were blown down by the high wind. Reports from the upper counties say that the peach crop will be largely damaged by the hail and ball. During the storm a large fire supposed to be barns and outbuildings was seen north of Somerville. It is impossible at the present time to estimate the loss to the crops, but the damage will be large.

Inquiry at the insurance offices all cited the fact that six fires occured within a radius of ten miles from Somerville. John L. Hageman, who lives on South Bridge, had his barn and out-buildings, but saved his stock. Dr. A. C. TenEyck of North Branch lost his barn, hovels, three horses, and carriage. This is the second time in two years that Dr. TenEyck's buildings have been struck by lightning, thus disproving the theory that lightning never strikes twice in the same place. John Allen, of Liberty Corner had his barn burned. A large fire occured at Bedminster, a fifth near Millstone, and the last was that at the barn of Snyder, who lives on the mountain back of Somerville. All of these fires occured within an hour and were plainly seen from the top of the Somerville carriage mills the highest point in Somerville.

In the central telephone exchange in Plainfield the lightning played havoc, a fuse on the distributing board, rendering all instruments useless until the hustling under manager Runyon replaced the burned-out fuses with new ones.

The burning of the huge paraffine works adjoining the oil tanks at Constable Hook, by lightning, Friday night, was followed by a number of Plainfielders on a late train. The great fire made a magnificent spectacle.

A JERSEYMAN IN COLORADO.

Senator Kaye of Somerset County Will Establish an Extensive Stock Ranch at Ridgway.

(Ridgway, Col., Herald.)

Senator W. J. Kaye, of Somerset county, New Jersey, has been making an extended trip through the West, and is here making a visit with Col. C. H. Nix, Mrs. Kaye and Mrs. Nix being relatives. The senator has become very favorably impressed with our town and people, and has decided to establish an extensive ranch here, by commencing with him, perhaps, several of our leading men.

Senator Keys will ship from his well-known Elm stock farm at South Branch, New Jersey, several standard bred trotting stallions, including the blood of "Jay Gould", record 2.20¾; "Bayonne Prince", record 2.21¼; "Stranger", 2.21¾; (the best stallion in the world for years); "Black Dutchman", "Wedgewood", and other very choice horses. Also some grand bred, standard and thoroughbred "Hal Pointer Medium", Harry Clay 45; "Daniel Lambert", Hambletonian 10, and others equally as well-bred that will prove a benefit to this country. They are all, in fact, horses that are famous throughout the East.

Such men as the senator, we shall have a boom in horse-flesh and other enterprises. The senator is a man of vast wealth, and of conservative and extensive influence. His advent into our midst as an interested party and investor, will give our town an impetus such as it has never had before. We must not look to our big fish stories over again, recounting how we lost the "big one" as usual, and are all in our little beds by 10 o'clock, and along comes the righteous sun the next morn. I tell you it puts muscle in your frame and makes the brain clear and health purified by such an event. The ladies a nuse themselves by walking, boating, making fancy work, visiting the picnic grounds to see the excursionists, and by attending balls and parties and I would like, and the great trouble is to keep them alive until we can get good success to send away. CAPT. MARTIN VINDICATED.

He Regrets Plainfield's Withdrawal from the Race, and Did All He Could to Prevent It.

(Elizabeth Journal.)

There has been a great deal of guesswork and not a little unwarranted comment because the Plainfield Bicycle club suddenly withdrew from the Journal trophy series. Several unauthorized stories were printed that discredited Capt. F. L. C. Martin, and that were in no way complimentary to the Plainfield cyclers. That the facts in the case would ultimately come to the surface was certain, and the Journal Democrat stated in the plain facts [as did THE PRESS] that the team had disbanded, and made no comments. Yesterday Capt. Martin was interviewed on the subject, and he said that it was a good all they ought to. Several unauthorized stories were printed that discredited Capt. F. L. C. KILLED BY A FALL.

A Sterling Citizen of Warren Township Meets With Fatal Injury.

Hiram Tunison, a well-known resident of Warren township, met with an accident a short time ago, that terminated fatally. He went up in a cherry tree to pick some cherries. The limb on which he was standing broke, letting him fall to the ground. He, being a very heavy man, received a severe shock. He was carried into the house, but could not be able to help himself, and medical aid was summoned, when it was found that his spine was broken just below the shoulder blades. Examination of the clothing was made to find marks of identification. There was none whatever on the clothes.

The coroner of the county was found a businessman of John Lindsay, gardener and florist, of Plainfield. There was also a card of the undertaker employed by Lindsay. Another card was found of Mrs. VanBoskerck of 76 West Seventh street, Plainfield. There was also a circular of the Plainfield Cycle club.

County physician Donohoe was notified. He left New Brunswick shortly before noon. When he arrived at Woodbridge he made a post-mortem examination of the body. He found there were no marks of violence. He said the body had been in the water about twelve hours, and that he died from the effects of concussion.

Some women say they heard screams in the direction of the hills about 10 o'clock Monday night, and shortly after that the report of a revolver. It is stated that William Green recognized the woman as one he had met on the road Monday afternoon. At that time she was walking, and in the direction of Carteret, reading a newspaper. He had never seen her before. The supposition is that she went to the top part of the cherry tree to get the cherries that were there Monday. There were 4,000 persons from New York at Boynton Beach Monday's excursion. The news came up in two barges towed by the Ogyuse. The Blackbird brought a third barge, with a thousand more merry makers, up to Manhattan's private ground a little below. The woman may have wandered away from one of these parties. It is not believed that she belongs in that section of the country. The coroner's affair, and its telegrams and long-distance telephone dispatches were bulletined before the eager inquirers in the hotel corridors. Coroners from New York did not know of the shooting until they read THE PRESS bulletins, as none of the New York papers contained the news except in late extras.

The usual base-ball bulletins of THE PRESS were displayed, to the gratification of the patrons of the house. A game was formed of the result of each innings of the championship games as fast as played. These bulletins are a regular feature, and are greatly appreciated.

PLAINFIELD PEOPLE AT THE LAKE.

How the Happy Boys Are Passing Their Vacation at the Popular Spot.

The number of Plainfielders at Lake Hopatcong of late has been considerable. The Crescent city colony have delightful quarters, most of them favoring the Van Over House. How happily the days are spent is told by one of them in the following letter home to THE PRESS:

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—All are well, and enjoying ourselves to our hearts' content, and we begin to count with regret the few remaining days of our outing. To those who have never been I do, this is a glorious spot. At daybreak I am awakened by the sweet songs of the birds, and as a rule I am out doors and enjoying a walk and romp with our dog "Sip", coming in to breakfast with a keen appetite. After that duty is attended to, my "side partner" and I hasten to our boats, and are over the beautiful rippling waters of the lake to some favorite spot, where we endeavor to outdo the finny denizens of the waters to see that they furnish success. At 12 o'clock comes the row home to dinner. That disposed of, we read the daily World to assist digestion, and then at about 2 o'clock we are out on the lake again with rod and reel and do not show up to supper until dark. Then we are entertained by the ladies with music. We have also our big fish stories over again, recounting how we lost the "big one" as usual, and are all in our little beds by 10 o'clock, and along comes the righteous sun the next morn. I tell you it puts muscle in your frame and makes the brain clear and health purified by such an event. THOUGHT TO BE FROM PLAINFIELD.

Another Route for the Borough. The Question of Water Supply Finally Settled.

While spiderman David H. VanPelt of Elizabeth street was at work in the Kill von Kull just off the Liebig fertilizer factory on Saturday morning he noticed a human body floating near by. Upon closer examination he found it to be a female, and he brought it ashore.

It was that of a woman about 40 years of age. She had on a flannel shirt, a jockey cap to match, new high gaiters, and well-made underclothing. There was no jewelry except a pair of cheap earrings. The finger nails were stained as if by tobacco juice. The autopsy and examination of the clothing was made to find marks of identification. There was none whatever on the clothes.

The coroner of the county was found a businessman of John Lindsay, gardener and florist, of Plainfield. There was also a card of the undertaker employed by Lindsay. NEW FERRIES FOR THE READING.

Passengers to Be Landed at the Battery by Speedy Passenger Ferryboats.

The Philadelphia and Reading Railroad company has completed arrangements whereby it will be enabled to put a much larger share of the passenger traffic than it now controls. Contracts have just been signed between the Reading and the Staten Island Rapid Transit company by which the Reading will be able to land its passengers at the Battery, and whereby the Rapid-Transit company will be able to run its ferry-boats over the Reading Line line without going out of the Staten Island ferry-house.

Briefly told, the plan of the Reading company is to carry passengers by two new boats from Jersey City to the Battery, using the Staten Island ferry-house as a landing place. The Rapid-Transit company

OCTOBER 21 A HOLIDAY.

Let There Be a Deserving Celebration at Discovery Day in Plainfield.

President Harrison yesterday proclaimed Friday, October 21, 1892, the four-hundredth anniversary of the discovery of America by Columbus, as a general holiday for the people of the United States.

"On that day"—he urges—"let the people so far as possible cease from toil and devote themselves to such exercises as may best express honor to the discoverer and kindle appreciation of the great achievements of the four completed centuries of American life.

"In the churches and in the other places of assembly of the people, let there be expressions of gratitude to Divine Providence for the devout faith of the discoverer, for the noble Christian men and guidance which has directed our history and so abundantly blessed our people.

Now is Plainfield's opportunity for a fine show of patriotism. Let there be immediate preparation for such a celebration of Discovery Day in this city as so great an anniversary deserves, and such as will reflect credit on Plainfield's fair name.

DEDICATED THE CHILD TO GOD.

Fine Convocts at the Salvation Holiness Convention.

The Salvation Army had a "grand holiness convention" at Elkwood hall Friday night, conducted by Staff Captain Marshall. The subject was "Wading Through Jordan." The hall was well filled with eager listeners of all classes. During the evening Capt. Tickner dedicated little Beatrice Louise Farrington to the Lord, the child's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Farrington, making the responses. The ceremony was very interesting, and the evening was made a notable one by the army circles. As other spoke enthusiastically to a Press reporter about the meeting, saying: "The power of God filled the hall and took hold of the hearts of sinners. At the close of the meeting five souls knelt at the mercy-seat for salvation and sanctification, and went away rejoicing in the God who had met them free."

OBITUARY.

Mamie Winner.

Simply and quietly as she had lived, so was buried in the family plot at Round Brook on Friday last, one of God's faithful workers—Mamie, daughter of George Winner, aged 32 years.

The last forty years of her life were of constant self-denial and tottsome devotion to others, in conjunction with her equally great humility.

There are many now living who owe their early education, their first start in life and subsequent assistance, to Mamie and Jennie Winner, the latter now dead to whom, when broken down with infirmity and adversity, their home was freely offered as a refuge.

With such hospitality upon very limited means these two noble women pursued "the even tenor of their way" for nearly half a century, and long after the surviving sister shall have joined the companion of her life, will their memory be cherished by the descendants of those whom they have befriended. Their good deeds will ever die!

Elizabeth Center Win the Key.

The century run of Saturday finished in Newark at 7:30 in the evening. It was considered a highly successful eve it the cyclists. Nearly all of the starters finished, including Mr. W. E. Martin, wife of one of the Newark riders.

The association prize offered by the Elizabeth wheelmen bringing home ten men out of twelve starters. The Atalantas won the first outside prize with seventeen out of eighteen men, and the Newark Business Men's Cycling League won the second prize outside.

Frank L. C. Martin of Plainfield was one of the speedskaters.

Four Plainfield riders entered the run, Capt. F. L. C. Martin, A. S. Fritts, L. S. Darling and F. L. Metcalf. Darling had his wheel smashed in a collision at Round Brook, and Metcalf's bicycle was wrecked near Princeton. The two riders returned to Plainfield and got other wheels and came to ride to Newark in the supper in the evening. Martin and Fritts rode the entire run, making 130 miles in all. Darling made 111, and Metcalf 100.

Suspicious of Somerville's Tactics. (Somerville Journal.)

The poor playing of Murray until released by manager Whelan, the alacrity with which he was signed by Somerville's manager, and the fact that he had played Saturday with the latter's team, suggest a pertinent question which, if answered conservatively, shows that some Somerville players will be small players next what they should be.

SURE WINNERS NOW!

KELLER'S BOYS HAVE TAKEN THE LEAD FOR GOOD.

Scenes Preceding the Final Game of the Championship Series, and the Players Seated Side Put Up an Excellent Contest.

One little hit by Hughes, and one little run by the same because of one little overthrow—and it is all Settled, and all the Elizabeth ball team got of credit to themselves upon their visit to Plainfield, Saturday of the contest.

The Crescents played a perfect game. Snedden's throw four feet over Jones's head, was the only error of the day. He pitched the record game of the series, however—only one hit being made off his delivery. But as he said himself: "I never have a chance to shut 'em out that I do n't spoil it myself."

There has n't been a more pleasurable game for the Plainfield team's admirers to witness, this season—it would not make an interesting story. The Elizabeth team had an off day at the bat, and that is all there is to it. Captain Bowes, who has succeeded Captain Williams, tried hard to lead his men to victory, and he, himself, never gave up the game until he, himself, for last man out, was the last to leave the field. Williams place at third, put up a far better game than his predecessor has in years. He had many opportunities and took them all to perfection. At the bat he got his first on balls once, and drove the ball into center and right field respectively upon other occasions. Capt. Bowes and Lufbery's place in right field, was of no sort of use. Two runs were scored on his muff of a long fly of Murphy's in the fifth inning, and at the last only once was pushed the ball outside of the diamond. As to the others, there is nothing special to say except that Lufbery played that game out of a glimpse of the form he ranks him as high among the Central league catchers; and Berry, who promised to make a big pair for himself made as he twice caught out on a foul tip.

Of the Crescents, almost all distinguished themselves. "Gentle" "Willie Again had no "letting" that day. He made a three-bagger, a single and a drive so far into right field that it was dropped and two runs were scored for Plainfield. Mac Murphy, in the place of Ted Peters, will make Mr. Gore hustle so before the season is out for a batting average, that Mr. Gore will wish he had never entered the Central league.

Daley, too, made a couple of beauty hits, Saturday, and even Rofford refused to be caught out on the first time *promptly in his life, and hit for fair when*ever he had a chance. Behind the bat, also, Chic was unusually full of ginger, and Turner handled his pitchers in grand style besides making one safe hit, a base on balls and long fly to right field and center.

But the "feature" of the day, again, was Bonner's pinging. He covered both the left and right infields, and but of no less than five put outs that otherwise would have been safe drives into the outfield. Leidy gobbled three and Murphy one high fyers, and none was so fine a catch that it fairly fell in his hand coming. This new accession, whose coming was exclusively told in Saturday's PRESS, decided his position beyond criticism.

BASE-BALL BABBLE

What kind of financiering is this? Gore was paid $35 Saturday by Somerville and he could n't hit the ball! Gaudaur was paid $10 and made a three-bagger, a two-bagger and a single!

On the 9th inst., at Elizabeth, Francis made the pitcher's record by holding the home team down to two hits. But Snedden made it with a no hit for Plainfield, Saturday, surpassed it.

There are good and sufficient reasons to expect that *a lot of the first-rate play*ers on the Somerville team will be laid up getting so much less money than is paid George Gore whom Tierney, of the Elizabeths, stood up Saturday as a "Third-class man."

THE PRESS does not agree with the Sun that "It is quite a slide down the toboggan for Gore from the National league to the Central New Jersey league." The majority of the Soldiers in the latter league are far superior to him and such men as Murphy can be spotted him.

Manager Mack is on the still hunt for "Buck" Ewing, and should that playedout catcher and first baseman leave the Cincinnati team he will be signed by some for Somerville at a price far above what he is worth. What will Kennedy and Harkins think about that? Either is a better player than Ewing, yet they will be working for less money.

Since Bonner was brought in from the outfield, his place has not been filled. Leidy has covered all the ground he could travel over in a way that hasn't been equaled anywhere this season, and Murphy has done his share, but it was not until all started in a three days' encampment at Prohibition Park, Staten Island, to be conducted by Major Evans, July 27, 28 and 29. Commissioner Ballington Booth and Colonel Evans will speak. There will also be present officers and troops from all parts, also the National Guards' band.

SURE WINNERS NOW!

KELLER'S BOYS HAVE TAKEN THE LEAD FOR GOOD.

Scenes Preceding the Final Game of the Championship Series, and the Players Seated Side Put Up an Excellent Contest.

One little hit by Hughes, and one little run by the same because of one little overthrow—and it is all Settled, and all the Elizabeth ball team got of credit to themselves upon their visit to Plainfield, Saturday of the contest.

The Crescents played a perfect game. Snedden's throw four feet over Jones's head, was the only error of the day. He pitched the record game of the series, however—only one hit being made off his delivery. But as he said himself: "I never have a chance to shut 'em out that I do n't spoil it myself."

There has n't been a more pleasurable game for the Plainfield team's admirers to witness, this season—it would not make an interesting story. The Elizabeth team had an off day at the bat, and that is all there is to it. Captain Bowes, who has succeeded Captain Williams, tried hard to lead his men to victory, and he, himself, never gave up the game until he, himself, for last man out, was the last to leave the field. Williams place at third, put up a far better game than his predecessor has in years. He had many opportunities and took them all to perfection. At the bat he got his first on balls once, and drove the ball into center and right field respectively upon other occasions. Capt. Bowes and Lufbery's place in right field, was of no sort of use. Two runs were scored on his muff of a long fly of Murphy's in the fifth inning, and at the last only once was pushed the ball outside of the diamond. As to the others, there is nothing special to say except that Lufbery played that game out of a glimpse of the form he ranks him as high among the Central league catchers; and Berry, who promised to make a big pair for himself made as he twice caught out on a foul tip.

A PARADISE ON THE HEIGHTS.

Brilliant Events, Lovely Women, and a Great Time Generally—THE PRESS'S Correspondent.

(From The Press of July 25)

NETHERWOOD, last evening, was the scene of the first progressive euchre party of the season at the hotel. It was held in the main parlors at 9 and closed at 11:15. The prizes were lovely, and selected by Mrs. J. E. Spencer, whose exquisite taste elicited high commendation.

Eleven tables were set at which were seated forty-four of the guests. It was a delightful event, a brilliant and joyous one, and another charming affair added to the chronicles of gay Netherwood. A generous sum was subscribed for the purchase of prizes by the guests.

The following were the fortunate winners:

Miss Goddard, bon-bon spoon.
Mrs. H. W. Williams, bread pin.
Mrs. O. B. Bridgman, pocket-book.
Mrs. J. F. Goddard, vase.
Mrs. Blount, bon-bon spoon.
Mrs. J. J. Eaton, bon-bon spoon.
Miss M. Meeker, silver-mounted hair brush and comb.
Mr. H. Williams, silver-wrought pocketbook.
J. F. Goddard, Russia leather dressing case.
F. S. Jordan, silver-mounted English umbrella.
W. H. Seeckner, silver filigree cologne flask.
H. Mansey, silver cigar cutter.
A large number of guests are sojourning here for the season. Admiral Walker, of the White Squadron, was a guest at the hotel during last week. The season of '92 bids fair to be a brilliant and notable one. The cuisine is excellent and the guests seem thoroughly satisfied under the capable management of proprietor Miller.

The Saturday night hops and Sunday evening concerts, under the direction of professor Greenop, aided by his excellent orchestra, are notable events of the season.

Occasionally Miss Conway entrances the guests in the rendition of some of her charming selections. Her lovely voice is of exquisite melve and shows the greatest of earnest study under her noted teachers, Del Puente and others.

There is a sense of restfulness environing this perfection of the heights of Netherwood, and I am quite sure none enjoys it more than the daily bread winner upon his return here from the city.

HORRIBLE DEATH IN THE HAY-FIELD.

Louis Cononer Frightfully Mangled by a Mowing Machine—The Top of His Head Cut Off.

Louis Cononer, of Mersville, a hamlet back of Passaic Valley, met his death by a singular accident. He hitched his team to a mowing machine and went to the meadow to cut hay. The knives became clogged by undergrowth, which necessitated his getting off the machine to clean the guards. While he was doing so, his team became spirited, turned around and threwing him in front of the moving knives. He had let go of the lines, and the horses, finding themselves free, started for home. Mr. Cononer could help himself. One of the sharp guards pierced his skull, and the knife cut a part of the skull off. Death was instantaneous. Mr. Cononer has found a large portion of the brain exposed.

His funeral was attended by a large number of his friends and neighbors, in whose esteem he was highly held. The Methodist church of which he was a member for so many years was crowded by them.

Mr. Cononer, with a number of other Germans, settled in the locality many years ago. They and their families have made it a thriving farming locality. He was a man of fine habits, and was unanimously and had cast a gloom over the whole community.

He was 76 years of age. He leaves a large family of grown childr n

PARK AVENUE'S PASTOR.

Considerable Doubt as to the Probable Choice—Carter, Stein Johns Wanted.

Opinion seems to be divided among the people of the Park Avenue Baptist church over the question of selecting a pastor. Although the Rev. Isaac Newton Phelps is in high favor, there are the o who want an hour other candidates before deciding whom to select. The Rev. Mr. Lockwood, who is to preach in the church in August, is preferred by a number But there are still others who are anxious to have the call extended to the Rev. Carter Heim Johns, and who are working hard to secure his acceptance. Mr. Johns is a popular preacher, especially among the young people, and has many warm friends in Plainfield. He would be decidedly an acquisition to the church.

Heavy Damage by Lightning.

The storm that visited this section Friday night was very violent. The lightning crashes were terrific, and the electric fluid did considerable damage to trees and buildings in various quarters. At South Sterling lightning struck and set fire to the barn on the four-mile farm. All of the out buildings were burned with their entire contents, including a large quantity of hay and grain and a number of horses, cows and sheep.

Not Lost of County Fairs.

New Jersey fairs this year are already announced as follows: Elizabeth, Aug. 17 to 19; Bridgeton, Aug. 30 to Sept. 2; Hightown, Aug. 30 to Sept 1; Mt. Holly, Sept 13 to 16; Somerville, Sept. 13 to 16; Newton, Sept 13 to 16; Waverly, Sept. 19 to 23; Trenton, Sept. 26 to 30.

Plainfield Withdrawn from the Race.

The Plainfield Bicycle club has withdrawn from competition in the Elizabeth Daily Journal trophy road races, owing to a disruption in its team caused by the absence from town of two of its best members.

Of Short and Round.

The plans for Netherwood's new station contract for a beautiful structure about 60 feet by 25, of stone to the window sills and of Roman brick above. There will also be a porte cochere and a covered platform of 127 feet on each side of the track. There will be a sub-way under the track. It is to be finished by Nov. 1.

MISS BULKLEY MAY BE THE CHOICE.

Plainfield's Popular Ex-Principal Recipient for Leather Souvenir at the Great Variety Fair.

A notable feature of the great Columbian exposition at Chicago is to be a group of memorials of women prominently connected with the past or present history of each State of the Union. These memorials will be placed in the buildings by the women of the respective States. The women of Connecticut have chosen Harriett Beecher Stowe for their representative, and a marble bust of that celebrated woman has been decided upon. An oil painting of Julia Ward Howe will represent Massachusetts in the group. New York's testimonial will be to Emma Willard, the pioneer of female education, and will consist of a library. South Dakota will send a life-size statue of an Indian girl. New Jersey has not selected its heroine yet, but has a remarkable number from which to choose, and Miss Bulkley, the naturalist; Mrs. Theodore Poole, Marion Harland, Mrs. Charlotte Emerson Brown, of Orange; Mrs. Margaret Bayard Dodge, New York; Miss Susan Hayes Ward, Newark; Miss Hetta Ward, Newark; Mrs. Florence Howe Hall, Scotch Plains; Miss Julia E. Bulkley, Plainfield; Mrs. Kate Cleveland Hoboken; Mrs. Blackwell, Elmora; Mrs. J. H. Knowles, Newark; Mrs. B. Williamson, Elizabeth.

The selection of either Miss Bulkley or Mrs. Hall would be eminently deserving. Miss Bulkley is famous the world over for her scientific knowledge of the animal system, and in her way she has done more than probably any other woman to the great and noble cause of education. Mrs. Hall's reputation is established by her contributions to literature. Both have been largely instrumental in developing a broad and higher plane of thought and action for human intellect.

A SORROWFUL WEDDING.

The Lover Was Faithless, But the Law Was Stern, and Started a Marriage Ceremony.

The groom Henry and a Miss Stevens, young colored people of Dunellen, were married at the residence of the Rev. A. J. Cutberty of New Market Wednesday.

The young people had a basis in arms, the Scarlet-Letter of her shame, and of her lover's faithlessness.

Henry had not denied his guilt, but had refused to keep his promise to marry the woman who had trusted him so fondly.

The aid of the law was therefore invoked, and constable Peters, armed with a warrant, arrested the recalcitrant lover

Rather than suffer imprisonment, Henry then agreed to the wedding ceremony, and the entire party repaired to the marriage, where an unhappy bride and happy groom were united.

JUDGE CODDINGTON SAVED HIM.

No Truth in the Terrible Charges Made by Spiteful Enemies Against a Westfield Lad.

Rose Bacon, the young colored lad charged with attempted assault on a little girl at Westfield, was discharged by the Union county court at Elizabeth Wednesday. Judge W. R. Codington of Plainfield was his counsel, and presented proof that there was no truth in the charge against the lad, but they were made through the spite of an enemy. Mr. Coddington's counsel could help him. Rose's self is best shown that the lad's character was unusually good, and that he was not morally likely to commit the offense charged. Even prosecutor March admitted that there was no evidence against the boy, and admitted his good character. The allegation was sole prosecuted.

Not the Worst Railway Company's Fault.

The delay in the starting of the Plainfield electric street railway service is entirely due, as THE PRESS foretold, to the delay in the car shops of the J. G. Brill company, of Philadelphia. The Brill company fixed in the contract for the delivery of the cars in this city, was July 15. Freight service was begun on and of the line of the buildings to do this, that he would have cancelled their order for the cars at once and placed it elsewhere if that would not have caused delay. It was the usual superintendent Patmore to the car shops with orders to stay there if necessary until the cars were finished and shipped.

Mr. Patmore's judgement was all others that Thomas Moving of Orange is proud and watchful of, and that is that "His word is as good as a government bond." When he learned that the cars would not be here at the date o ntracted for," and that in consequence he would be placed in the unpleasant position of having disappointed the people, he shut his eyes to all question of cost and took such steps as will bring about the starting of the Plainfield railway service at the earliest moment. The cars will be here probably in three weeks—finished and equipped, ready to start.

Improvement on North Avenue.

The old bill-board on North avenue adjoining Gardner's stables is to be taken down. A substantial board fence seven feet high, to contain a painted advertisement of THE PRESS, will be erected 10 feet back from the sidewalk, and the space in front will be neatly sodded. The improvement is to be done by THE PRESS, which has for years controlled the bill-board, and the idea of the improvement is to attract attention to the vacant lots, which are in the market. A Newark firm tried to secure the advertising privilege of the board, but was refused.

A Plainfielder Talks on Loan Insurance.

At the semi-annual meeting of the Building and Loan association of New Jersey, held in Library Hall, Asbury Park, to-day, an address was delivered by B. R. Struthers of this city, on "Building Loan Insurance." Mr Struthers showed how this insurance was to be combined with building and loan associations so that the borrower who has partly paid for his home in the event of his death, will have the balance liquidated. He stated in an interview with a reporter that a payment of 25 cents a share per month for the first year, and a corresponding rate per month during the succeeding

HERBERT VON BISMARCK

The Son of the Iron Chancellor Married to Countess Hoyos.

Brilliant Wedding Ceremony Performed at Vienna—The Bride's Family—Where the Young Couple Will Make Their Home.

The marriage of Count Herbert Bismarck to the young Countess Hoyos was celebrated in the Calvinist church, at Vienna, Austria, a short time ago. Prince Bismarck was present, wearing the white uniform of the Magdeburg cuirassiers, of which regiment he is the honorary colonel. The bride wore the ribbon of the grand cross of the order of St. Stephen of Hungary, in compliment to nationality of his son's bride. Prince Bismarck was loudly cheered on his way to and on his arrival at the church. Count Herbert, the bridegroom, wore a German uniform and looked happy and affable. The Russian ambassador to Germany, Count Schuvaloff, acted as best man. He wore the uniform of a Russian general. The Hoyos family were in the picturesque gala dress of the Hungarian nobility. Not an Austrian uniform was worn, for the Austrian court was entirely unrepresented.

Countess Margarethe's father is Count George Hoyos, a partner in the celebrated firm for the manufacture of torpedoes at Fiume, and her mother is an Englishwoman, the daughter of Mr. Whitehead, the founder of this torpedo manufactory, and in consequence the young countess has been brought up like an English girl and is especially fond of outdoor amusements. She is twenty-one, and therefore very much the junior of Count Herbert. Her elder sister is married to a great friend of Count Herbert Bismarck—namely, Baron von Plessen, the Prussian ambassador at Darmstadt, and it was through him that the acquaintanceship was made that led to the engagement. Countess Margarethe is a bright, handsome girl, with plenty of spirit, and will inherit a large fortune at her father's death.

Count Herbert has always had a decided penchant for English women, and it is the English bringing-up of his bride that fascinated him. The engagement of the moment has frequently been reported at various times within the last few years, and one another English lady of title was selected as his future bride by public gossip. On each occasion, however, the proposed alliance failed to meet the approval of the man of iron, and the count, like the dutiful son that he is, bowed in obedience to parental authority.

Count Herbert is in his forty-third year and his bride is twenty years his junior. He is a major in the German army, has served the German empire in various diplomatic capacities and was lieutenant-governor in London and subsequently at The Hague. He has been a member of the reichstag from Schleswig-Holstein and was head of the German foreign office, resigning shortly after the dissension between the emperor and his father.

The castle of Schonhausen, where Count Herbert Bismarck and his bride will take up their residence, is the family seat of the Bismarcks, whence the "wicked Junker" sprang. First went out to gain his laurels in the battle of life. Up to 1867 the old house in the Altmark, situated on the property of about twenty-eight hundred acres of excellent land, was Prince Bismarck's only landed property. It was there where he rested from his political labors and became once more the genuine farmer who had managed his own estates, planted his oats and barley and drilled his men for a grand shooting jacket and strode across country, carrying a stout cudgel and closely followed by his dogs.

A Young Woman's Great Reach.

Richard Harding Davis thus writes of a lady who runs a Texas ranch: "When ladies go to call on Mrs. Richard King, after they have passed the usual greetings they have to drive ten miles up the walk to the front door. But the hiker, when he wants to get at a kitchen, does not drive thirty miles from the back gate? Mrs. King lives on her ranch, forty-five miles south of Corpus Christi. Over her acres roam 100,000 head of cattle. These are attended by 500 cowboys and 1,000 ponies. When there comes an order from a Chicago butcher for 1,000 head of cattle, it is Mrs. King who rides up them up and send them on their way. Abraham, Isaac and Jacob would find this life ideal for Sarchiel was married the less so by reason of the modern improvements of the home and house parties of this lady of large acres and many cattle."

A Ghastly Marriage.

A stock raiser and ranch owner of Hemet, Neb., has just married a widow of the ghastliest marriages on record. He was a widower. Ten days before his second marriage he was taken with the spirit message saying that his wife was in a partu rited state, his approaching marriage was known to her, and that state the wounded spirit the stockman, and his bride were married at midnight on the grave in which his former wife was buried. From exposure and fright the strangely mated bride has since been confined to her bed.

A LITTLE GIRL RULER.

The Habits of Wilhelmina, the Pretty Queen of Holland.

Not long ago Queen Wilhelmina, of Holland, visited Germany. Emperor William arranged a series of grand banquets and receptions in her honor, and the event was talked about in her own country as well as in every part of Europe, because the queen is only twelve years old—a little girl ruler.

Queen Wilhelmina herself would have liked better to play with her dolls, own her pigeons, or drive her team of six ponies, but she is Holland's queen, and so must begin to take an interest in the pomp and ceremony which is so necessary in her.

She is too young to really assume royal queenly duties, but every public act of the royal power is performed in the name of the little ruler.

These royal duties came to her in consequence of the death of her father, Queen Wilhelmina's husband, the only child of King William and Queen Emma of Holland, and so the next heir to the Dutch throne.

The little Will...mina lives with her mother at the castle of Loo. The little queen leads a quiet, happy life. She rises at seven o'clock in the morning, and goes at once to her lessons. At eight o'clock the queen's breakfast is served; from nine o'clock until twelve she is busy with her studies, and at noon she enjoys a simple dinner of fruit, milk and bread. At six she dines with her mother, and at eight o'clock she goes to bed. Queen Wilhelmina is simple to a fault.

Queen Wilhelmina has been taught to take an interest in her people, and this little girl ruler grows more and more dearly loved by those whom she is to govern.—E. Adlie Heath, in Our Little Men and Women.

HOW FISHES EAT.

Some Have Teeth, Others Manifolds For a Throat or Stomach.

The earliest way in which fishes eat form quite a study. Some fishes have teeth, and some have none at all. In some the teeth are in front, upon the tongue, in some in the throat and in others in the stomach. Some draw in their food by suction; the sturgeon is one of this class. The jelly fishes secrete the food, engulfing its body around the prey it covets. The starfish fastens itself to its victim, turns its stomach wrong side out and engulfs its dinner without the formality of swallowing it through a mouth first, much less of adding persuasion.

Then there is a peculiar little crab—the horseshoe crab—which chews up its food with its legs or claws before it passes the morsels over to its mouth. While other crabs and lobsters masticate their food with their jaws, the last afterward complete the work with an extra set of teeth which they find conveniently located in their stomachs.

So there are all sorts of methods for those regularly assisted, and the fishes which have teeth show almost as great a diversity in the number, style and arrangement of them. The ray or skate "has a mouth set transversely across its head, the jaws working with a rolling motion like two hands set back to back. In the jaws are three rows of flat teeth, set like a mosaic pavement, and between these rolling jaws the fish crushes oysters and other mollusks like so many nuts.

The carp's teeth are set back in the pharynx, so that it actually masticates its food in its throat, while the pelecanus has five teeth projecting into the stomach, and working with a peculiar centralized motion, which makes them to be a good service as if they numbered hundreds.

And crime are only a very few of the odd methods in which fishes eat.—Harper's Young People.

New or Never.

There is hardly anything so bad that a wise person cannot get some good out of it. Indeed, it is one of the principal marks of a philosopher that he reaps an advantage even from misfortune.

A little Boston girl, according to the Herald, has found some good out of a bad dog. Finally she was taken very ill with pneumonia. One day, when she had begun to get better, she told her mamma how very much she wanted a dog, and begged her to ask grandpa to buy her one.

Mamma answered that grandpa did not like dogs, and probably would not be willing to buy one. Then, seeing the little invalid look sadly disappointed she added:

"Wait till you get well, my dear; then we will see."

With her quickened the child, whose few years had taught her a little wisdom, "the sicker I am the more likely he will be to buy it for me."

Her Reason.

Even an artistic judgment depends on the "point of view." A lady who saw that her son had seemed to take a certain interest in the objects of art in her parlor, said to her:

"Which one of those figures do you like best, Mary?"

"This one, mum," said Mary, pointing to the armless Venus of Milo.

"And why do you like the Venus best?"

"Sure, it's the slatest to doost, mum!" answered the girl.

ROUMANIA'S QUEEN.

Princess, She Says, Should Wed Only for the Love They Bear.

The queen of Roumania, Carmen Sylva, has come from Palanza to her castle at Wied, in the Rhine. King George, of Sweden, visited her there a few days ago. He found her still shattered in health, but well enough to let him hear last night a poem, constructed by the happiness of Princess Oscar's new royal wife with the misery of Mlle. Vereschen, the young woman who tried to capture Crown Prince Ferdinand, of Roumania, but has been condemned to spend the rest of her days in a convent rage him to Princess Marie, of Edinburgh.

The queen still bemoans the disappointed love of her favorite lady-in-waiting, and has not been reconciled to her husband since he stood by her, and upon the advice of his cabinet, to continuance the match between Mlle. Vereschen and the crown prince. The queen informed the Swedish king that she was writing a long poem, in which she would publish the sorrows of Mlle. Vereschen, the disappointment of Crown Prince Ferdinand over the thwarting of his first love affair, and the advantages of allowing princes, like other men, to choose their own wives instead of selecting their wives, as did Prince Oscar, of Sweden.

Princess Marie, of Edinburgh, will hardly be gratified by reading the new poem when it shall appear that her future husband is supposed to love still another woman.

Senator Vance as a Humorist.

Senator Vance has the reputation of being a humorist. It is a deserved reputation. "Sunset" Cox used to say that it ruined his future. As Mr. Vance has no ambition beyond the senate, and as humorous speeches there have made him rather popular with his people, he can afford to be "funny." Many years ago I spent part of last summer abroad. Mrs. Grey accompanied him. On a steamer on Lake Lucerne he encountered Senator Vance, who came up behind him as he stood near the rail and, touching him on the shoulder, greeted him most cordially. When the usual greetings had passed between them, Senator Vance asked: "Well, as Sandy said, are you traveling for pleasure or for the good of the party?" Mrs. Grey's embarrassment will be understood when it is known that Mrs. Grey sat within three feet of him, an amused listener to the conversation.

Not Obliged to Believe Everything.

The dean of Norwich in a recent sermon told this story of Bishop Heber of the new archdeacon as it appears among the middle classes: A worthy tinner once upon an occasion stated that he was called to find that he need not believe literally all the marvelous tales in the Bible which he found upon proved to be impossible. Being pressed to name one of them, he mentioned the deadhead of Jonah, he understood, 400 feet long, 20 feet broad, and 40 feet high, and contained 320,000 cubic feet. He also contained, therefore, that the leviathan would not have carried it up and across the waters a standard ton of 40 cubic feet.

MORGAN AND HARLAN.

Appointed Behring Sea Arbitrators by the President.

Both Are Able Men and Thoroughly Patriotic—The Interests of the United States Will Be Protected at Paris—Other Appointments.

President Harrison's selection of Senator John T. Morgan, of Alabama, and John M. Harlan, of Kentucky, associate justice of the supreme court, to be arbitrators on behalf of the United States in the controversy between this country and Great Britain concerning the jurisdictional rights of the United States in the waters of Behring sea, has met with almost universal approval, says the New York Sun.

SENATOR JOHN T. MORGAN, OF ALABAMA.

There is no higher democratic authority on the subject of international law and no more honorable and fair-minded man in public and private life than Senator Morgan. He is a lawyer by profession, and has been a member of the senate for fifteen years, during that time rendering long service as a member of the committee on foreign relations. He is, as he has been for many years, the leader of the minority in that important committee. Although one of the most talented of Confederate brigadiers of congress, Senator Morgan knows no politics when an international or non-partisan subject is before the senate for discussion, and on several occasions he has sustained the administration, regardless of whether it was democratic or republican, and has often been found in hearty accord with Senator Sherman, the chairman, and the other republican members of the committee on foreign relations. Mr. Morgan is reputed to be one of the most lucid and able lawyers in the south. He is a close and constant student, a man of the simplest habits, who spends his nights in studying up the questions that arise in the senate and his days in the senate chamber, where he is always found ready to act as the spokesman of his party. His public speeches are logical and eloquent, and it is no task for the Alabama senator to address the senate for two or three days at a time, when he considers the subject of sufficient importance, as he did at the state department and at the white house that Mr. Morgan was selected as arbitrator for two reasons, first, because if the supreme court democrat should be chosen, and, secondly, because he was thought to be the man best fitted by his legal habit and knowledge of the Behring sea controversy for the difficult and delicate duties of the office.

Justice Harlan was selected for much the same reasons applied in the case of Senator Morgan. He is a lawyer who has made a specialty of international law, and the young Kentuckian has many years' standing of both the president and Secretary Blaine, his name was decided upon without consultation with him and without the exertion of outside influence in his behalf. Justice Harlan has been a hard worker during all the years that he has been on the supreme court bench and, being robust and strong, he could, except his annual salary, has been unable to enjoy the benefits of travel as he would like to do. The president and Mr. Blaine, therefore, were very glad of the opportunity to confer upon him an additional honor, the sorrows of Mrs. Tarascon, the disappointment of Crown Prince Ferdinand over the thwarting of his first love affair and the advantages of allowing princes, like other men, to choose their own wives instead of selecting their wives, as did Prince Oscar, of Sweden.

Princess Marie, of Edinburgh, will hardly be gratified by reading the new poem when it shall appear that her future husband is supposed to love still another woman.

A Ghastly Marriage.

A stock raiser and ranch owner of Hemet, Neb., has just married a widow of the ghastliest marriages on record. He was a widower. Ten days before his second, he, being taken with the spirit message saying that his wife was in a partu rited state, his approaching marriage was known to her, and that state the wounded spirit the stockman, and his bride were married at midnight on the grave in which his former wife was buried. From exposure and fright the strangely mated bride has since been confined to her bed.

A LITTLE GIRL RULER.

The Habits of Wilhelmina, the Pretty Queen of Holland.

Not long ago Queen Wilhelmina, of Holland, visited Germany. Emperor William arranged a series of grand banquets and receptions in her honor, and the event was talked about in her own country as well as in every part of Europe, because the queen is only twelve years old—a little girl ruler.

Queen Wilhelmina herself would have liked better to play with her dolls, own her pigeons, or drive her team of six ponies, but she is Holland's queen, and so must begin to take an interest in the pomp and ceremony which is so necessary in her.

She is too young to really assume royal queenly duties, but every public act of the royal power is performed in the name of the little ruler.

These royal duties came to her in consequence of the death of her father, Queen Wilhelmina's husband, the only child of King William and Queen Emma of Holland, and so the next heir to the Dutch throne.

The little Will...mina lives with her mother at the castle of Loo. The little queen leads a quiet, happy life. She rises at seven o'clock in the morning, and goes at once to her lessons. At eight o'clock the queen's breakfast is served; from nine o'clock until twelve she is busy with her studies, and at noon she enjoys a simple dinner of fruit, milk and bread. At six she dines with her mother, and at eight o'clock she goes to bed. Queen Wilhelmina is simple to a fault.

Queen Wilhelmina has been taught to take an interest in her people, and this little girl ruler grows more and more dearly loved by those whom she is to govern.—E. Adlie Heath, in Our Little Men and Women.

HOW FISHES EAT.

Some Have Teeth, Others Manifolds For a Throat or Stomach.

The earliest way in which fishes eat form quite a study. Some fishes have teeth, and some have none at all. In some the teeth are in front, upon the tongue, in some in the throat and in others in the stomach. Some draw in their food by suction; the sturgeon is one of this class. The jelly fishes secrete the food, engulfing its body around the prey it covets. The starfish fastens itself to its victim, turns its stomach wrong side out and engulfs its dinner without the formality of swallowing it through a mouth first, much less of adding persuasion.

Then there is a peculiar little crab—the horseshoe crab—which chews up its food with its legs or claws before it passes the morsels over to its mouth. While other crabs and lobsters masticate their food with their jaws, the last afterward complete the work with an extra set of teeth which they find conveniently located in their stomachs.

So there are all sorts of methods for those regularly assisted, and the fishes which have teeth show almost as great a diversity in the number, style and arrangement of them. The ray or skate "has a mouth set transversely across its head, the jaws working with a rolling motion like two hands set back to back. In the jaws are three rows of flat teeth, set like a mosaic pavement, and between these rolling jaws the fish crushes oysters and other mollusks like so many nuts.

The carp's teeth are set back in the pharynx, so that it actually masticates its food in its throat, while the pelecanus has five teeth projecting into the stomach, and working with a peculiar centralized motion, which makes them to be a good service as if they numbered hundreds.

And crime are only a very few of the odd methods in which fishes eat.—Harper's Young People.

ARIZONA'S STONE AGE.

Interesting Relics of a Long-Forgotten People.

Ruins of Historical Rock Pueblos—The City of Pueblo Built on the Roofs of an Ancient Race—Its Records Left.

That Arizona was inhabited before the dawn of history and by a people, perhaps more highly civilized than is enhanced in the arts of sterilization, is beyond question. The traces of their occupancy are found in the Gila valley, in the San Francisco Chronicle, are of the clearest and most unmistakable character, and while still puzzled in which they possessed it and the cause and manner of their mysterious extinction is an inexplicable mystery, proofs of their presence for perhaps thousands of years are found in the mines, mounds, ruined cities and canals which abound along the Salt and Gila rivers from the vicinity of their inception to their confluence with the Colorado. The Little Colorado, the Verde and the Rio Piedro also show many traces of a people well informed in a certain civilization and who have for at least a thousand years been extinct.

The peculiar dryness of the atmosphere has had a wonderful effect in preserving the buildings from the ravages of time. In the mounds which are scattered through the country and which represent ruined houses may be found adobe filled with parched corn and wheat, as good to-day for consumption as the day they were hidden from the elements by the fearful sandstorm that must have prevailed when they were buried.

The largest in the sub-covered ruins of Pueblo Grande are about 200 feet square. The fine sand-off the desert must have drifted over everything, and the ruins lay there as the tombs of the historians of a vanished race. Their erection of concrete buildings through out the country shows them capable to have been well versed in the composition of cements adapted to the region and its climatic changes.

By far the most interesting remains of the Gila valley are the ruins of a canals which prevail through all the valleys of the territory. The longest is the one beginning at Gila river, which supplied with water the ancient city, now only marked by one standing building, at Casa Grande, the object about which so much has been written, and which has excited so much interest among archaeologists during the last ten years. This canal was fifty-five miles in length and for most of the distance twenty-eight feet in width, with a depth of sixteen feet. The volume of water taken out of the river must have been immense, for it supported into the animal and vegetable life of a valley containing millions of acres. In places this canal is found to be still in fairly good shape, but for the most part its course is easily traced.

One of the notable specimens of these canals is in the Salt river valley, and only three miles from the present city of Phoenix. It is on the Salt river opposite Tempe, and for two miles runs almost parallel with that stream. The old bed is still partly standing, and for this distance the ditch is perfectly open, and all that would be necessary for it to supply the country with water again would be to open the headgate by removing the stone and earth with which it is filled. Two miles from its head the engineers who located the Maricopa canal found the ruins of the Antes ditch, and to-day the water runs over its pebbly bottom just as it did two or three centuries ago. How how different is the condition of the people it supplied!

The ditch was only nine miles in length and not so large as the one on the desert of the Casa Grande, but it ran through the heart of a city with a population of no less than 500,000.

For miles and miles in the mesa, in perfect regular order, tell the tale of houses destroyed by the ravages of time and of the hundreds of mounded to-day. Lieut. Cushing directed his attention pristipally to excavating in this section of the Gila valley for the New England Historical society, and he was rewarded by unearthing many stone axes and skeletons.

His conclusion was "that the people must have lived in the stone age, long before the discovery of the Egyptian civilization."

Phoenix was built on the ruins of this ancient city, hence its name, and not a mouth passes but some one picks up a stone knife, or bowl or other article that they are dumb as to the history of their former owners. The only hieroglyphics the lost race have left are those on the painted rocks across the Salt river from Phoenix. They cover the mountainside for acres and have always puzzled alike the student and scientist. The nearest apparent conclusion that has been arrived at is that they are the mystic exploits of their painters and are a history of their tribal wars.

One thing is apparent to the student of things ancient when he looks on these canals, and ruined cities permeating both this country and Mexico, and that is that the civilization of Egypt was not the cradle of the first prehistoric civilization."

A FORMIDABLE SHIP.
Description of the New Steel-Armored Battleship "Texas."

The double turreted steel-armored battleship Texas, the first one of that class in the new navy, was launched at the navy yard at Norfolk, Va., a few days ago in the presence of a large number of spectators, including representatives from the navy department at Washington and other officials.

The Texas has been on the docks in the Norfolk navy yard since June 11, 1889. Following is a description of the vessel: Principal dimensions—Length, 300 feet; breadth, 64 feet; depth, 21 feet, 6 inches. The main armament consists of two twelve-inch breech-loading guns. The secondary battery consists of eight six-pounders and four three-pounder rapid firing guns, with four forty-seven Hotchkiss guns, all mounted on the gun deck, behind cast and case-hardened steel armor. The armor belt and barbettes are 10 in. thick. The conning tower and the military mast are protected by rapid firing guns on the forward bridge, the military mast and the after bridge with 3-inch armor. The engines are of the vertical triple expansion type, and are of 9,000 horse power. There are six cylinders, driving four screws. The engines are placed in two separate engine rooms, with a bulkhead between them. The boilers are also in two separate rooms, and are double ended. There are six boilers in a room, and they are placed end to end, with the fronts facing each other. The turrets are armored with twelve inches of steel on the sides, with a thickness of nine inches of steel on the roof. The armor on the conning tower is eight inches of steel, which also protects the pilot house. The turrets are of the single gun type, and the machinery connected with them is operated by electricity and carries powerful electric searchlights.

The Texas will be used as a flagship, and carry a complement of 400 officers and men. The machinery is being built by the Richmond locomotive and machine works, of Richmond, Va., and will be placed on board the Texas at the Norfolk navyyard. The contract for the Texas was awarded to Delamater & Co., of New York, and the armored battleship has much greater endurance and speed than her class of vessels, the Indiana class, knowing that the vitals of the ship are protected by armor.

A JELLY PALACE.
California Women Contemplate a Unique Exhibit at Chicago.

The women of California are going to build a jelly palace at the world's fair. arched entrances will form a shrine twelve feet square. The frame of the structure will be the lightest possible steel. It will carry plate glass sheets its entire height. On these sheets the bottles containing jelly of every color will be arranged. Some of them will be set upright and others horizontally, according to the effects to be produced in the decoration of this novel palace. Six thousand bottles, each one pint in diameter, will be used; 986 four inches in diameter, and 1,040 of assorted sizes, making a total of 12,000.

The women estimate that this palace will cost $6,000, of which $1,000 will be for the steel frame to be designed by Architect A. Page Brown.

Oddities About the River Nile.

The Nile has a fall of but six inches in a thousand miles. The overflow commences in June every year and continues until August, attaining an elevation of from 24 to 30 feet above low water mark, and flowing through the "Valley of Egypt" in a turbulent body of water from a mile to a mile and a half wide. The water recedes each year the exhalations from the sand are simply inconceivable to a people not native. The mud deposit adds about eight inches to the soil every century, and throws a steady increase of from 10 to 16 feet into the sea every year. This being the case it is plain that the mouth of the river is thousands of feet further north now than it was in the time of the Ptolemies, and it is only a question of time when the sediment will make a dam entirely across the Mediterranean.

A POPULAR WOMAN.

We Often See Her Face and Always Like It.

The Young Lady Who Posed as the Model for the Goddess of Liberty on the Cartwheel Dollar—Talented and Modest.

It is interesting to know that the girl who posed as the model for the Goddess of Liberty which is familiar to the sight of this nation from its position on the face of the many silver dollars of the land, should have been born in the City of Brotherly Love, the "cradle of American independence." It is not only interesting, but is a striking historical coincidence that this should be so.

Anna Willess Williams, the original of this pleasing goddess, was born in Philadelphia during the civil war, says the Ladies' Home Journal. Her mother was of southern birth, the daughter of Dr. Arthur H. Willess, a wealthy slave owner of Maryland, who, while his daughter was still somewhat young, lost his financial reverses. When nineteen she married Henry Williams, of Philadelphia, and removed with him to that native city. Mr. Williams soon became affluent, but through some mismanagement of his property and investments his daughter, Anna, the youngest of nine children, was born under most adverse circumstances. While she was still but a child her father died, leaving his widow, although in delicate health, with the responsible task of rearing and educating her children, and it was entirely through the resources of her mother that Miss Williams received her education.

Early in 1876 the treasury department secured the services of Mr. George Morgan, an expert designer and engraver, who had previously been connected with the royal mint of England. He was assigned to duty at the Philadelphia mint upon the design for the new silver dollar which was soon to be issued. He gave his attention first to the reverse side, for which a design of the American eagle was afterward selected, hoping that a suitable idea would occur to him for the face of the Goddess of Liberty, which, it seemed proper, should be used as the principal device on the coin. After considerable delay and frequent change of the plan, it was decided that if possible, the head should be a representation of some living American girl. In the pursuit of his duties Mr. Morgan had been introduced into the society of Mr. Thomas Eakins, an artist of considerable reputation, and this acquaintance finally resulted in the cause of the foundation of a warm friendship between them. It was through Mr. Eakins that Miss Williams, a lifelong friend of his family, was induced to pose for Mr. Morgan for the designs of the Goddess of Liberty. The sittings soon came to be looked forward to with pleasure by the artist, who decided upon as the ornate position for the head.

For nearly two years after the issue of the Bland dollar, the model's identity was kept a secret. In the summer of 1879, however, an indefatigable newspaper reporter discovered a possible clue to Miss Williams' connection with the coin. Since that time the annoyance to which she has been subjected has been constant. Letters, visitors—both to her home and school—and disagreeable personal encounters have been of almost daily occurrence.

Miss Williams' literary talents have found expression in interesting contributions to the current periodicals. Her taste in reading is principally for the philosophical ignatians. She is a lover of chosen essayist, and Howells her favorite novelist. The fine arts also claim her appreciation. She is a devout musician of high order, a medium soprano of delightful, if special, style, and worthy the honor bestowed upon it of representing the goddess of her native country. Her complexion is fair, her eyes blue, her nose Grecian, and her hair, which is almost her crowning glory, is golden in color, abundant in quantity and of wonderful lightness of texture, the soft coil in which it is worn being appropriately classic in style. Miss Williams is refined and gracious in her presence and free from self-consciousness. It is said of her that she combines to a special degree strength of character and purpose with great gentleness and modesty.

Window Witchcraft.
All Hindoos believe in witchcraft, and, in strange contrast to the old belief in witches, they believe that only the young and pretty maidens are the chief actors in such uncanny mummery. If crops are blighted, or if a general sickness prevails, they write the names of all the young women of the vicinity on separate tree branches and then immerse the stems of the twigs for four hours and a half in a solution of holy water and sandal wood. If two or more of the twigs wither during the specified time, the young women whose name or names are attached thereto are immediately put to death. Thus the influence of the witch is counteracted, the crops saved and health restored.

NOBLE MOUNT MORGAN.

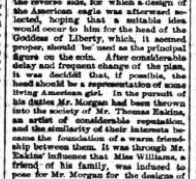
One of the Finest St. Bernard Dogs in America.

As Will Be Employed by the Charities of North America, N. Y. Is a Descendant of the Historic Monastery of the Remarkably Sweet Animal.

One of the most typical St. Bernard dogs in America is Mount Morgan, of the Mount Morgan kennels, situated at Mile square, Yonkers, N. Y. His weight at the kennels is 180 pounds in August, and his shoe weight is about 190 pounds. He is massively built, being very heavy in the forequarters and shoulders, and his fore and hind quarters are magnificently developed.

His body is of a rich orange, tawny color, his chest, feet and tail the latter tail, being as white as snow, while the front features of this remarkable dog to his head, which, although massive, acknowledge is equal to that of any to his class. Yet he has a noble appearance and more nearly as a dog. Before he came to America he was frequently sent through the streets of London soliciting alms for charitable purposes. His extraordinary intelligence renders him particularly adapted to such a task.

Mr. Bernard E. Dyckie, his present owner, is now having a winter residence built at Mount Morgan, and he declares that he can make himself perfectly at home in the public institutions of Yonkers. The box will be fitted with a key which will be given for a stated time to each of the hospitals and charitable institutions in turn. The unique appearance of the dog will undoubtedly attract the attention of all who see him, and when he approaches them in a beseeching manner, raising his right paw as if to beg, there is little likelihood that any will pass him by unnoticed. The money box will be suitably inscribed with the name of the institution profiting by his presence, so that every one will know toward what object they are contributing. When necessary it will be sent to a home in the country, as he is so sagacious that he can be taught with the greatest ease. Unfortunately, no accurate account has been kept of his collections while in London, but they are known to have amounted to many thousands of dollars.



MOUNT MORGAN.

Mount Morgan, or Hero, as he is called in private life, was born in England on June 16, 1887, and arrived in America by the White Star steamer Teutonic on February 4 last.

His sire was the champion prize winner Save, and his dam was Sabrina. He was the property of the renowned Lord Rose, who died on May 12 last at the Mentbon kennels, Phoenixville, Pa. Lord Rose had won over twenty-six first prizes, and weighed 225 pounds before his last fatal illness.

Although somewhat smaller than his brother was, Mount Morgan is much more typical, and for this reason is considered by many the superior animal of the two. Certainly no dog could excel him in temper and intelligence. His gentle manners show considerable breeding, and he might be allowed to roam through a drawing-room filled with the choicest bric-a-brac without the slightest fear of his breaking a single article.

His life at the kennels at Mile square is simple, and very much to his liking. He breakfasts at eight o'clock on oatmeal and milk or half a pound of dog cakes. This meal serves him until five o'clock in the afternoon, when he dines on cooked meats, with gravy, bread, potatoes and two or three raw eggs. Most relish is said to be given raw meat with his dinner. He is kenneled in a large horse box, in one corner of which is a comfortable bunk, filled with clean rye straw, which serves him for a bed. But he is not kept confined there. He takes plenty of exercise, daily, and running from eight to ten miles each day.

The owner of this wonderful dog has wisely decided never again to exhibit him at bench shows. He asserts that Mount Morgan has made his record, and considering the risk encountered at shows does not care to expose him to them. Already too many valuable animals of the St. Bernard breed, imported at large cost, have died, and he would be a sad thing if this noble brute should be numbered with them.

John Johnson's Complaint.
Men will become unhappy rich should be judged leniently. They have many temptations from which the rest of us are happily delivered. Take John Johnson, a man of this class, was desirous to be known as a literary turn of mind, and he succeeded in getting a library. One of his purchases was an old dictionary, which, being somewhat out of repair, was sent to the binder's. When it was returned to the purchaser he found pasted on the back the words: "Johnson's dictionary." The sight threw him into a furious passion, and he handed it to the messenger: "Why didn't he put the full name on: 'John Johnson's dictionary?'"—Tid-Bits.

MARQUIS SALISBURY.

The Famous Prime Minister of Great Britain.

Although a Pleasant Gentleman, He Has Never Been Popular with the People—Personal Peculiarities of a Great Man.

The most remarkable thing about Lord Salisbury, writes the London correspondent of the Chicago Inter Ocean, is a personal one, though it has a certain sort of political interest. He is the first prime minister of England since his ancestor, Robert Cecil, earl of Burleigh, lord keeper of the great seal under Queen Elizabeth, who has worn a beard. The fashion of wearing beards went out in England at the beginning of the seventeenth century and has never quite come in again except with class of men—from whom prime ministers are drawn. Even the mustache has almost unknown in England except among the military until after the Crimean war, when civilians took to wearing it, partly in imitation of the soldiers and partly from the influence of the French alliance. But as for the beard, it is still regarded as an eccentricity or as the mark of some outlandish bringing up. The official class, as a rule, wear only side whiskers. Mr. Gladstone, Lord Beaconsfield, Lord Russell, Lord Palmerston, Lord Derby, Lord Aberdeen, Sir Robert Peel, the dukes of Wellington, Lord Melbourne and all the other prime ministers of the nineteenth century wore only side whiskers, while before their time, for two centuries, the custom was to be close shave. At the present day beards are more common in the house of lords than in the house of commons, because the good many elderly men wear them, and the lords are much older than the commons.

But in either house a beard makes a man decidedly noticeable. Lord Spencer, formerly lord lieutenant of Ireland, wears a big, rough beard, and Lord Lathom, the present lord chamberlain, wears a huge and beard, combed straight down to his waist. But Lord Salisbury is the only prime minister for just 200 years who has worn a beard. And such a beard as it is. If it were not for the great, bulbous forehead and long, aquiline nose, his beard would seem to cover the whole face of the man and constitute his chief individuality. With its sturdy business, and total disregard of conventional ideas, it is, in short, very characteristic of him. The dukes of Devonshire, who also wears a beard, is said to have more "you be damned" about him than any other nobleman in England. But Lord Salisbury runs him close. He is the very pride of the unbridled, bull-headed, good-tempered English aristocrat; and he shows it in his appearance as much as in his views and acts.

At home, while Lord Salisbury's great merits as a foreign minister are very generally acknowledged, he has never gained popularity in the ordinary sense. The secretary swore "by Gad, I'll not yet, dear," said Maria. "Well, then, I think I'll leave you," said he, and he threw himself into the sea. On the way down he told three men that if there was anything that were him to the skin and bone it was that confounded house-cleaning. Said he: "We are in the midst of it now, and I tell you I'm about used up."

SHERMAN'S ADVICE.
How the Famous Ohio Senator Conducted His First Campaign.

I heard a curious story of John Sherman's first election to congress to-day, writes the Washington correspondent of the Indianapolis News. It was told me by Hon. Peter Grosscup, who is now one of the leading lawyers here in Chicago, but who a few years ago was the republican candidate for congress in Sherman's Ohio district. Grosscup at this time lived in Ashland, O., a town of 5,000 people, but fifteen miles from Mansfield, where Sherman lives, and he was once the republican nominee for attorney general of the state. Said he:

"When I was nominated for congress, I was in doubt about accepting the nomination, and I went up to see Senator Sherman, and I told him there was no chance of me being elected. He advised me strongly to run, and said: 'You are a young man and you can't tell what you may accomplish. I started just as you have been, and I had no more chance of being elected than you have. I hadn't much money, but I had an old white horse and a rattle-trap of a buggy and I took old Wesley and drove around all over my district. Every village I came to where I could find two or three men I would get together and get out and jump upon a chair or store box and make a speech to them, and I did this day after day, and I went into every spring up any day without any republicans the thought of other people.'"

SULTAN OF JOHORE.

He Will Visit the Chicago Exposition with His Suite.

Through the solicitation of Hon. Rounseville Wildman, United States consul general and worlds fair commissioner for the Straits settlements and Borneo, his highness Abookar, sultan of Johore, will undertake a visit with his suite to the world's fair and to send over to the exposition a complete Malay village. His highness is the leading personage resident in the Malay peninsula and one of the richest princes in eastern Asia.

His highness will make the Malay village exhibit a very thorough and interesting one. Although the colonial government declares its sole any appropriation toward the fair, yet through commercial and personal channels a large number of merchants will cooperate in creating an adequate fund for the purpose. Abookar is a good representative of what a Malay of superior taste and education can be when gifted with the opportunities of civilized life, and in this respect the present sultan of Johore is considered as one of the most enlightened princes of the east. He is noble in birth and in impulse of character, stern in purpose, yet merciful, honorable and truthful in word and deed, keenly intelligent and a judge of character.

Rodents Ruining Vegetation.
The London correspondent of the Manchester Guardian throws new light upon the continued plague of "mice" in the south of Scotland. It appears that the vermin are not mice, but voles. They are larger than mice, with shorter tails, and are declared to differ from ordinary mice just as much as hares differ from rabbits. They are destroyed or are destroying the vegetation over many square miles of upland pastures in several counties, as they are in millions upon the hills and are rapidly multiplying. Their presence in such vast numbers has been unknown to science until exported from the continent a large number of short-eared owls, which were apparently unknown in this district. A similar visitation of voles upon a still larger scale took place in the sixteenth century.

BARBARISM.

The hasty and cruel punishment inflicted by that Pennsylvania Colonel, without formal investigation, upon a private under his command, causing him to be strung up by the thumbs and kept in excruciating torture until he felt exhausted, has created general and well deserved public indignation.

The offender, a thoughtless young fellow of twenty years of age, hearing of the dastardly attempt to take the life of the Carnegie manager by an assassin, unconcerned with the striking workmen, had given vent to feelings of exhilation,

Such conduct was certainly unjustifiable on the part of any person, and especially so by one wearing the uniform of a State defender of law and order.

He richly deserved punishment and ignominious expulsion from the ranks, but to subject him, without martial judge or jury, to the penalty of barbaric usage was hurling defiance at nineteenth century civilization.

The incident furnishes proof of the truthful assertion that some puny men—"clothed with a little brief authority play such fantastic tricks before high Heaven as make the angels weep."

POLITICAL INTELLIGENCE.

Hon. Knute Nelson, as a Republican Congressman from Minnesota, not only voted for the Democratic tariff reform measure known as the Mills bill, but by speech boldly condemned the Republican system of tariff bounties subsequently embodied in the McKinley bill and formally endorsed at orthodox political faith by the National Convention which placed in nomination Harrison and Reid.

Republican leaders denounced him as a party traitor, and predicted that his political death warrant had been signed and sealed.

Mr. Nelson never swerved from his advocacy of tariff reform principles and thereby rose in popular esteem.

Now the Republicans of Minnesota nominate him for Governor as being their most available candidate.

Mr. Nelson illustrates a moral worth consal-tering.

The flow of political intelligence is onward and cannot be driven back.

To be a Tariff Reformer is to merit and receive public approval.

PROTECTED HUNTERS.

Advices from England announce as follows:

"Mr. Andrew Carnegie has leased the shooting privileges of Hamnoch Lodge, in Sterlingshire, for grouse and other game are abundant at this place."

McKinley protection pays somebody. Who are its favored beneficiaries?

Not the workmen of Homestead or Pittsburgh in this country.

Oh, no!

But the millionaire bosses who can live in princely style abroad, and chuckle over golden dividends squeezed out of American labor by virtue of McKinley tariffism.

They are the happy protection gamebaggers.

From the Democratic standpoint protection to be honest must be just, and to be just must treat all classes and all interests impartially, giving no undue advantage to the greatest nabob over the humblest wage-earner.

That is Democracy and it is as true and prospering as sunshine.

NEW JERSEY POLITICS.

Despite the hot weather the inside movements of Democratic politicians have been vigorous and earnest, and matters are rapidly converging to a focal point, around which a battle will be fought.

The great point of the contest at present is the Democratic nomination for Governor, and the situation at present about this: Essex county presents and is pressing the name of Judge Frederick Kingsland, and he will undoubtedly be before the convention as one of the principal candidates. General Richard A. Donnelly, of Trenton, has a host of friends and admirers, and will receive a very decided support from his county and Congressional district. Judge Lippincott, of Hudson, is mentioned by those who would take advantage of his action in dealing with the bolters' ticket. The most recent name projected into this canvass is that of Mr. Edward F. Young, of Hudson, and his sponsors are claiming that he is almost sure to be. Because of the combination that is back of him. That combination, it is said, is made up of ex-Congressman Pidcock, ex-Congressman Miles Ross, Senator McPherson, Ellis P. Thompson and Henry C. Little, and the animating spirit and purposes of the candidacy is hostility to Governor Abbett. Mr. Young is a man of character and reputation; is connected with one of the State's largest banking and manufacturing institutions, and, with Senator McPherson, enjoys the closest relations with the Pennsylvania railroads. No person could be selected who would more consistently represent the reverse of Governor Abbett's and the State's policy towards the railroads than Mr. Young, and if the Democracy chooses to place itself in that position it cannot do so more effectually than by nominating him.

So far as political management can make them so, the plans of the Pidcock, Ross, Little, Thompson Combination are perfect. But the "best laid plans of mice and men oft gang aglee," and the Democrats of New Jersey are very prone to upset machine arrangements.

The last State Convention taught the politicians a lesson, and the only one ought to do the same thing in the same way. If the politicians had had their way the New Jersey delegation to Chicago would have given the cold shoulder to Cleveland, and he would have been defeated. But the party rose up, and told the politicians that Cleveland must be supported honestly, and he was so supported with the best results.

If the Democratic party leaves it to the Pidcocks, and Thompsons, and Ribons, and Staff Littles to nominate its candidates for Governor, it will increase the burden of the day, and, of course, if it does not secure, defeat. And the way to prevent this is for Democrats to take part in the primaries and the State Convention, and see to it that the candidates selected is worthy of every Democrat's support.—Trenton True American.

PRESSING ON TO VICTORY.

Fourth Ward Democrats Arouse Public Interest in the Burning Issues of the Day.

The drenching rain that prevailed Tuesday night did not prevent an enthusiastic meeting of Fourth Ward Democrats in C. A. Hall. The evening was devoted to pleasant personal greetings among the assembled voters, and speechmaking by Mayor W. J. Sanderson and the Hon. Robert E. Marlies, Councilman Vhomas L. Frazee, president of the Fourth Ward club, beamed genial smiles upon the gathering that dispelled all the dampness and gloom with which the storm sought to penetrate the hall. He cordially welcomed the voters, and gracefully introduced the orators of the evening.

It was a delight to the people to have the borough's excellent mayor with them. He gave them the plain, straightforward facts about the tariff and the Force Bill, and by his clear logic and superior eloquence proved himself a most able and effective champion of the Democratic platform and candidates. He produced indisputable statistics proving that the Homestead troubles were caused by the Republican high tariff breach between the working-men. A tariff that was virtually prohibitory had been put on the productions of the Homestead mills, with the design that the profits would enable the laborers' wages. Instead of increase, there had been decrease. It was such false pledges as these that were bringing party to the bone and sinew of the land, that were bringing deserved disaster on the Republican party.

Mr. Sanderson produced further proof of his tariff-reform argument in the statement of Mr. Hutchinson of Australia, made personally to him. Mr. Hutchinson is the elected head of the municipal association of Australia to represent that great country at the Columbian exposition. He is an ex-mayor in New South Wales, one of the most prominent men of that section. New South Wales, he says, is a radical, absolute Free Trade country. Her entire provisions are based upon the "protective" policy. Yet it is a matter of fact that in Free Trade New South Wales wages are from 50 to 80 per cent higher than in any of the "protected" colonies, while the price of all such commodities as food, clothing, boots, shoes, and general supplies, is lower. The fact the mayor quoted was most telling argument. The testimony was unimpeachable, and the experience of New South Wales could be safely taken as a criterion for any country. Mr. Hutchinson says that New South Wales imports much machinery of American make, including Baldwin locomotives and agricultural machinery, and would gladly import more but cannot secure exchange for their own productions. For instance, a prohibitory duty of 30 per cent on United States on merino wool, which can be produced only under the conditions that obtain in Australia, and cannot be raised in this country. That was the duty recommended by physicians to be mingled with American wool in the manufacture of garments to be worn next to the body for the rigors of the American climate. Australians want to supply the wool to us. They do not want our money in exchange, but American agricultural machinery and implements. Fair and free trade of commodities in that way would most truly benefit the workingmen. Mr. Sanderson was especially forcible against the Force Bill, whose iniquities he denounced with righteous wrath. He eulogized as the measure of infamy. During the evening he illustrated his address with various lively anecdotes, and his hearers continually manifested their appreciation of his fast-hitting arguments and merry humor. When he had done they eagerly crowded about to thank him for his manful defense of the Democratic principles and greeted him for the fine and thorough gentleman that he is.

Mr. Martine was greeted with vociferous applause that testified to the warmth of affection that exists for him in the hearts of the people. He waxed highly eloquent as the champion of the workingman's cause, and proved himself a master of vituperative against the gross iniquities of that popular fallacy, "Protection". He made many telling arguments against the Republican doctrine, and among other clinching anecdotes told how the father of a poor young Englishman leaving for him had sent from England a new suit of clothes for his son, and the son had been forced to pay a duty of $14.90 on the suit to get it out of the custom-house. He had paid the tax ?—asked the orator, and the audience were well convinced that the tariff was a tax to be collected and not to the exporter as Republicans claimed.

Mr. Martine's speech was liberally punctuated with his usual flow of funny stories. He was loudly applauded, and at the close of the meeting a vote of thanks was extended to both him and Mayor Sanderson.

H. Sebring and daughter, Miss Mary Sebring, Thos. E. Keller, John T. Odam, B. Liefke, John Blackford. They will join Hugh de Payens, Washington, and George C. Little, and the animating spirit and purposes of the candidacy is hostility to Governor Abbett. Mr. Young is a man of character and reputation; is connected with one of the State's largest banking and manufacturing institutions, and, with Senator McPherson, enjoys the closest relations with the Pennsylvania railroads. No person could be selected who would more consistently represent the reverse of Governor Abbett's and the State's policy towards the railroads than Mr. Young, and if the Democracy chooses to place itself in that position it cannot do so more effectually than by nominating him.

So far as political management can make them so, the plans of the Pidcock, Ross, Little, Thompson Combination are perfect. But the "best laid plans of mice and men oft gang aglee," and the Democrats of New Jersey are very prone to upset machine arrangements.

The last State Convention taught the politicians a lesson, and the only one ought to do the same thing in the same way. If the politicians had had their way the New Jersey delegation to Chicago would have given the cold

SUED BY HIS SECRETARY.

Capitalist Schlicht Has Seeks to Evade His Employe's Judgment.

Paul J. Schlicht, of the firm of Schlicht & Field, founders of the Cosmopolitan Magazine, is involved in considerable difficulty with the owner of the city, who was his private secretary in a Morris county scheme which recently collapsed. The office of the company was in New York, and many of the duties of the secretary's work fell on Mr. Verrier's shoulders. When the bubble burst Mr. Verrier found himself tasking several months' salary and more or less bills had accumulated. He brought suit and obtained judgment. Schlicht paid a portion in cash and gave a note of $150 for the balance. Mr. Verrier got the note discounted and used the proceeds. When the note became due it was protested and he had to pay it. He brought another suit and secured further judgment, and last week proceeded to execute his claim by attaching Schlicht's household goods at his home on Somerset street, Plainfield, sale. On the day of the sale Schlicht secured a stay by producing his wife's evidence that the goods attached to be sold were her own private property. The sale was therefore adjourned, and the facts of the case are to be heard by justice Nash, who with a jury will decide the question of ownership, and order the sale to cease or continue. Schlicht explains his financial difficulties by the statement that all his resources are invested in the scheme of a practical market of a long-distance telephone invention that will "talk" for unlimited distances. The phone is said to be perfected, and another suit named Amsterdam, whose rights were obtained by Schlicht.

Schlicht first became prominent as a capitalist by securing from the widow of Mr. Shannon, patentee of the Shannon letter file, the patent rights of the invention, and he and his partner Field made a fortune out of it by the enormous daily sale of the files. Schlicht then lived at Rochester. He lost much money in the Cosmopolitan scheme, and was obliged to sacrifice his elegant home at Orange, to which place he had removed, and where he is said to have lived very extravagantly. He then went to Morristown on various schemes, one of which is said to have cost president Thomas Nevius of the Plainfield Street Railway company $4,500, and which failed. Mr. Verrier sued Schlicht to that extent, and found that the chattel mortgage he had been holding as security was valueless.

A DISPUTED VICTORY.

The Score in Plainfield's Favor, But a Discrepancy Claimed by the Jerseys.

The New Jersey Athletic club's cricket eleven played the Plainfield st. George's eleven at the home grounds, Friday. The game was closely contested, and at the end the score was announced 83 to 81 in favor of the Plainfield team. In looking over the score after the game the visitors, the New Jerseys discovered that an error had been made in the total of runs, whereby the Plainfields were credited with three runs to which they were entitled to on a particular play. The mistake was generally admitted, but too late to change the announcement of the result. Undecided if to consider the game would have been a New Jersey Athletic Club victory by the score of 81 to 80. The score as recorded, however, was:

The Plainfield Water Company Settles the Wheelmen's Suit.

The members of the Mercury wheelmen, who recently met with an accident on Westfield avenue by running into a heap of earth left by the contractors who were laying the water mains of the Union Water company of Plainfield, and who employed W. H. K. Davey to represent them as counsel, have settled their claims for damages without the necessity of a suit. ELECTRIC LIGHT CONSOLIDATION.

Franklin's Fleet Abandoned, and the North Plainfield station's Machinery Removed—Sebring's Mills Water-Power Insufficient.

(From The Press of July 28.)

Dan. Cooley & Davis, the present owners of the Edison electric light plant on North Plainfield, Somerset, Bank, has decided that it is useless to depend longer on the water-power at Sebring's Mills for the two incandescent lighting systems, and eight the Sebring's Mills plant was abandoned. The machinery was removed to the North Plainfield station, and will be used there. The fact that the Sebring station it is expected that the new boiler and engine will be started up this evening. Every facility for the proper lighting of both North Plainfield and Dunellen will be provided in the North Plainfield works. The company's aim is to give the best house-and-street lighting service in the State, and to make the service so popular that their increase of patronage will offset the disadvantages of having to run their engine for the power now furnished to the Plainfield company by having its plant directly on the line of the railroad, with a switch run into the yard.

The defects in the service of which Dunellen people have complained are to be abolished. They are all attributed to the insufficiency of the old water-power, the inadequate capacity of the North Plainfield works, and the efficiency of the steam-power, will, it is expected, overcome the difficulty. The increased cost, it is said, to the electric current will be sufficient for all the company's lamps in every section.

It is an interesting fact that the electric lighting of the Park dwelling house and of one of Rockview avenue's residences was all on the direct current from the Bailey's Mills station. The substitution of the two systems is expected to be a benefit to both.

THAT "WHEELMEN'S" CLUB.

Only a Crafty School to Save Curfews for the Bonnet Plume, and Gossamer Head Wort from Vassar Voters.

The idea of having a campaign bicycle club in Plainfield may have some very attractive features, but there are those who are inclined to say that the idea is a astute management of the campaign pocketbook is to save expense by making the young voters work their passage to Saratoga on their own wheels and at their carfare. The proposition to have the wheelmen parade, except by themselves, won't work. If an attempt is made to make an exhibition up foot go as fast as they mounted on wheels, or the cyclers go as slow as the walkers, there'll be great confusion in the ranks. The wheelmen in the parade, the only small element of bicyclists of the city. Indeed, the club seems to be a citadelfrected pet idea of Messrs. Thomas and Runyon of the Courier staff, neither of whom appears to have any more conception of the impossibilities of bicycles in campaign work than a blind cat with a crippled hop has of the grandeur of Niagara Falls. It seems a pity to have a "wheelmen's club" run by those who can't distinguish a safety bicycle from a lofe or a grindstone. The wheelmen who don't care to have their runs dictated by the risky rulers will stay out of the club. There's no reason why a legitimate club should be ruined for selfish partisan purposes.

SMASHUP ON FRONT STREET.

Woman and a Child Tumbled Out, But No One Injured.

The flagging of the crosswalk across West Front street in front of the house of Somerset has not been laid properly since the street railway tracks were put down, and on Friday the crookedness of the flagging was responsible for a mishap that might have been serious. Mrs. A. L. Cadmus of Plainfield was on a drive riding an iron-gray horse. In the carriage with her were Mrs. Ayres and a little boy. One of the rear wheels of the wagon caught in a crack of the uneven crosswalk, and the wagon was tipped suddenly off. The occupants of the carriage were tumbled out into the roadway, and were dragged by bystanders from under the horse's feet. The little boy had a leg bruised by the horse stepping on it, but no one was seriously hurt. A new wheel was obtained from a wheelwright shop, and the party drove on home.

IRON HALL MEMBERS INDIGNANT.

A Jackson Attack on the Order Repudiated by Its Financial Papers.

The Plainfield branch of the order of the Iron Hall, of which Viscount W. Nash is chief justice and P. P. Scott is accountant, is justly very indignant at the attack made upon them by the News and the Courier of Saturday. The order has a large membership in this city, as everybody knows, and its very genuine. One of the supreme officers says concerning the attack:

"The information that an application has been made for a receiver for our order does not worry me in the least, as any one can make such an application; but there will be trouble for the manager when the matter comes up for court. I don't know who has caused this trouble, but I am sure it has started from jealousy. The order is the largest fraternal order in Indianapolis, and it will be a difficult matter to get ahead of us in an Indianapolis court. We have about 70,000 members in the country and Canada; they have paid away about $2,922,000 in sick and final benefits, and we have over $2,000,000 left in undoubted securities. There are about 8,000 of our members in Philadelphia alone, organized into sixty-four branches. Since our order was started in 1881, we have conducted everything on a square basis and have a clean record."

WHEELMEN, BEWARE OF CRANFORD.

Championship Treatment of Cyclists by Village Gentlemen.

Cranford is making a bad name for itself among the wheelmen. That is to say that the contemptible acts of some rascals which have occurred in Cranford of late have been accepted by the legal authorities of law and order that cyclists are third about entering that thriving village.—Wheeling Journal.

The above item refers to the tying of ropes across the roads at sufficient height to throw the rider of his machine. It is reported that several wheelmen have had the misfortune to have their heads and their machines otherwise damaged by these tangles having access at the whalebone of Cary pass Rich Cranford. Why isn't the Cranford authorities up and a step to these things?—Westfield Standard.

THE TOWN COUNCIL.

(From the Press of July 28.)

The appointment of incompetent men on street railways is being very actively discussed here, without any apparent effort to get to the root of the evil. The Dudley fatality and subsequent fatal accident, the other week, to Conductor Ayres, are the two cases that are chiefly cited, but it had to be one or the other, as both men were killed or crippled for life.

KILLED BY LIGHTNING.

SAD FATE OF A SOUTH STERLING FARMER'S DAUGHTER.

Sounds Made from Shelter Under an Old Tree Feeling Her Terrific Thunderstorm, and Her Instant Death to the Bolt That Shattered the Forest Giant—Her Companion Paralyzed.

At least one death was caused by the fearful lightning that accompanied the storm on Friday afternoon, and it was in this vicinity. The victim was Pretty Gussie Ryan, a farmer's daughter. Gussie's father was dead, and she lived with her widowed mother at South Stirling. The best of the day had been unbearable, and in search of relief from the heat Gussie and went in bathing in the Passaic river. Her companion was Annie Baldwin, who had been visiting her. When the storm came up, Gussie dressed herself and took shelter from the rain under a large oak tree. She tried to persuade Annie to go with her, but Annie said she was afraid it was too dangerous to leave the shelter of the tree. Suddenly a terrific and deafening crash rent the air. A tremendous bolt had been hurled down from the clouds, rending the tree trunk in two, and scattering the branches with its fury. The bolt seemed to leap from out the heart of the oak a few feet above the ground, after having split and splintered the tree's tough green wood, and passed directly through the body of the unfortunate girl. She was thrown heavily to the ground by the shock, her clothing was torn open down one side, and one of her rubber boots was ripped open and buried some distance away. Death was instantaneous. Annie was terrified by the scene that she hardly dared approach the fateful spot. Finally, however, she satisfied herself that Gussie was dead, and started the sad tidings to the dead girl's mother.

Gussie was an attractive young girl, only 17 years of age. She was a general favorite, and her sad death has cast a gloom over all her acquaintances.

A CHANCE FOR A BOROUGH PARK.

Mr. Dyer Will Sacrifice His Home for the Public Good, But Wants Proper Reimbursement.

As has already been mentioned in these columns, if the proposed Madison avenue improvement goes through to Somerset the land of J. C. Dyer, at 43 Craig place, will have to be appropriated for the purposes of the new highway. Mr. Dyer has a fine home here, and naturally regrets to part with it. He does not wish to stand in the way of any public improvement, but naturally feels that he ought to be fully reimbursed for the loss of his property. He has a pleasant little park adjoining his home, at the rear of which is a beautiful spring of pure, cold, ice-cold water. He feels that if his home is to be broken up the purchasers ought to take all his land, and not leave the park for residences on his lot. The acquisition would be a good one for the borough, as the land could be contained as a small public park, and would be a beautiful feature for the borough property, and not for the city's loss, for Mr. Babcock will refuse to touch it—he like other men, having no desire to be taken advantage of.

WILLIAM M STILLMAN.

[The Press never placed the value of the engine house property at $12,500 or anything else. It will say now, however, that it would not sell for less than $20,000. Mr. Babcock in an interview with The Press yesterday, stated that he was willing to pay what was right, and his view of the matter did not include $12,500. This is based on figures allowing twice as much per square foot as he paid for the land adjoining, and on what a new building would cost as good as the present engine one. Mr. Babcock has also offered a lot free on his new street to which he will remove the present building. Mr. Stillman's statement about the rear part of the Building would fall over, is rather a libel on good mason John Emmons who built it. Ed.]

MIDDLESEX COUNTY BURIED HER.

The Wooderidge Suicide Undoubtedly Ellza Brady of Plainfield.

The body of the woman found in the Elk Kill von Kull has been positively identified as that of Eliza Brady, a young girl from Plainfield who was known at Mrs. Lindsay's intelligence office at dependent and tired of life.

Lindsay Cornelius Woodbridge at 8 Wednesday afternoon, and positively identified the remains. Eliza Brady, she said, was an Irish woman, about 25 years of age. She had been in this country twenty-six years, and in Plainfield about four years. Mrs. Lindsay said she did not think the girl had any relatives or friends. The last time she saw her was on Saturday last. The Brady woman then said she was going out of town and would be back again on Monday. She was of a morose and despondent disposition, and Mrs. Lindsay believes that she committed suicide. Eliza had never been out to Staten Island, as far as known, but she probably wandered away across country.

Dr. Donohue made a thorough examination of the body Wednesday morning and found no marks that would suggest that the woman had met with foul play. He left town before the arrest of Mrs. Lindsay, but said that he would issue a burial permit as soon as the woman was identified. As she had no friends, Middlesex county buried her, Thursday afternoon.

GREAT TIME AT UNION VILLAGE.

Rousing Celebration and Banner Raising in Honor of Democratic Candidates.

The Democrats from all around the neighborhood gathered at Union Village Saturday night and had a rousing demonstration. An enthusiastic ratification meeting was held, called to order by Henry Hagens of the Plum staff and presided over by the Hon. Thomas Lane, editor of the Summit Record. Mr. Lane introduced Hon. Thomas Dunn and Hon. James E. Martine of Plainfield delivered a masterly oration. The Democratic candidates and speakers were heartily applauded. A monster banner bearing fine portraits of Cleveland and Stevenson, was hung to the breeze, there was a beautiful display of fireworks, and appetizing refreshments were served at the home of Mr. Carroll, who with Mr. Frazier and others are to be credited with the success of having by their liberality made the affair so glowing a success. There was a big cannon at hand, and its salutes awoke the mountain echoes. All had a glorious time, and it was considered a great night for the triumphant Democracy.

—The nuisance of soda bathing in the brook near North Plainfield residences is to be stopped by the Health Department, who will arrest future offenders.

When Baby was sick, we gave her Castoria.
When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria.
When she became Miss, she clung to Castoria.
When she had Children, she gave them Castoria.

THE EXTORTIONATE EXPRESSMAN.

A Plainfield Citizen Discusses an Elderly and Feeble Woman, From One.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—It is not high time that the ladies of Plainfield when left unprotected during the hours their male representatives have to be at business, should be protected by public authority from the insolence and unworthy representatives of the express agencies who take advantage of their sex to be extortionate, overbearing, and even impertinent. What is the use of having legislation here in public service responsible, fair and civil porters, and those who are impolite and exacting, as anywhere.

Friday I happened to be at home when one entered, and overhearing the unparliamentary language used to a feeble and elderly lady while exacting from her double tariff (which he afterwards conceded to be extortionate) I had to eject him.

I refrain from giving names but think a reasonable statement may do something to awaken a right feeling toward wives and mothers left exposed to such treatment. PLAINFIELD CITIZEN.

PRESIDENT NEVINS'S MODEL ROAD.

Its Use Will be Unlicensed and Its Service Will be Perfect From the Start.

General superintendent Passmore of the street railway company, will make another trip to the shops in Philadelphia to insure the arrival of the cars in Plainfield in time to begin running next Saturday. The delay has been due to many good results. The road will now start under the most favorable conditions. Everything is ready for perfect service from the beginning. Even the uniforms of the motormen and conductors will all be finished and President Nevins's model road will be a model from the start.

Abating Borough Nuisances.

The North Plainfield board of health has for weeks been pumiled to know who was emptying garbage, refuse and slightly-used ice into those more secluded localities. The smells from the dumping-ground have been not only an annoyance to the neighborhood but detrimental to public health. After considerable detective work, the health board succeeded in discovering the perpetrator of the outrage. He was compelled to abate the nuisance, and given to understand that a repetition of his offense would result in removal of his scavenger Houses. He will not, however, find it to himself to the established dumping grounds.

That Queer Electrical Storm.

William Pine, a skilled observer, reports that the magnetic storm which accompanied the recent display of the aurora borealis, which was seen as far south in its effects on electrical apparatus in this city and vicinity, was one of the most severe that he has ever encountered. The disturbance began at 10:30 o'clock, and during the phenomenon, began early in the day and at last almost completely paralyzed the wires of the Atlantic & Pacific company. Between 12 and 12:15 noon, he noted so fewer than 150 changes in the direction of the current on a New York and Providence wire, and when the current averaged 9 or 10 milliamperes. Some of the magnetic waves that struck the wires were of Atlantic force and magnitude, and the effects produced were of corresponding variety and extent. At one time a reading on an iron wire between that of Erie City and Chicago showed a difference of potential between the grounds at the two ends of about 600 volts. This was the highest electro-motive force ever noted on the wire. The current strength on an Elizabeth, N. J., wire rose to a maximum of 150 milliamperes with an estimated electro-motive force of 510 volts. Mr. Pine holds the spots on the sun to be responsible for these latest extraordinary manifestations, and says that ever since the first days of the season, and given to understand that a repetition of his offense would result in removal of his scavenger Houses. He will not, however, find it to himself to the established dumping grounds.

TWO MORE CANDIDATES.

The Leaders of the Prohibition and the People's Parties.

Interesting Career of Gen. John Bidwell, of California, the Color-Bearer Nominee—The Eventful Life of Gen. James B. Weaver.

Gen. John Bidwell, prohibitionist candidate for president of the United States, is probably the most shining example of a thorough, though rather sudden, conversion on that subject to be found in the United States. Twenty-five years ago, in his place in congress, he advocated national measures to encourage the production of wine and grape brandy, and predicted that California would one long curbed the nation as much by exports in that line as she had done in gold. He did much to fulfill his own prophecy, establishing one of the finest vineyards on the coast, but when converted to prohibition he had every vine torn up and the roots burned.

He has had a remarkable and varied career. Born August 5, 1819, in Chautauqua county, N. Y., and taken in early boyhood to Erie, Pa., he went thence to Ashtabula, O., for an education, and then taught school in Ohio and Missouri. In 1841 he was one of the famous pioneer band to California which has furnished so many materials to local historian and romancer. This was the first band of settlers to cross the plains, and was six months on the way from Missouri. All the rest has been told by the general himself in his admirable sketches in the Century Magazine.

He served in the war against Mexico, and was later a brigadier general in the state militia, was the trusted manager of Gen. Sutter, a member of the constitutional convention of 1849, an operator in gold mines and finally a member of congress from 1865 to 1867. He has also served in the state legislature and other local offices. Meanwhile he had secured a tract of some 22,000 acres at Chico, in Butte county, which he has made one of the finest places in the world. He has constructed twenty miles of elegant drives through this tract, which are open to the public six days in the week, but on Sunday the gates are closed.

He was a democrat till the civil war closed, then a republican till after Garfield was elected, and then became an advanced prohibitionist, casting his first vote of that sort for St. John in 1884. Not the least interesting fact about him is that, though nearly seventy-three years old, he has the air and bearing and agreeably the vigor of a man of fifty. His wealth is great, and he is very popular with his neighbors of all ranks.

THE POPULISTS' CANDIDATE.

Gen. James B. Weaver, presidential candidate of the people's party, otherwise known as the Farmers' Alliance, was born in Dayton, O., June 12, 1833, was graduated at the law school of the Ohio university at Cincinnati in 1854, enlisted as a private in the beginning of the war and advanced in rank with a rapidity equaled in very few cases. He was also the lieutenant of Company G of the Second Iowa infantry, attained the rank of major October 5, 1861, and on July 5th of the same year himself was killed at the battle of Corinth he was colonel. Finally he was brevetted brigadier general "for gallantry on the field, to date from March 13, 1865."

In 1866 he was elected district attorney of the Second judicial district of Iowa, and in 1867 was appointed assessor of internal revenue for the Fifth district of the state, an office he held for six years. He first sat in the lower house of congress in 1878, and was elected as an independent republican to the Forty-sixth congress. Here of his way of thinking, however, were even then organizing a new party, and in 1880 he became the greenbackers' candidate for president. Electoral votes were cast and fifteen tickets he received 307,740 votes. He then resumed private life and professional practice at Fort Dodge, Ia., in 1884 he was reelected to congress.

No man in the Fiftieth congress was better informed on financial matters, and as he conspicuously proved by holding the house in a deadlock for several days on a question regarding the Oklahoma reservation.

In 1888 he was again a candidate for congress, but was defeated by the republican aspirant.

The Effect of Temperature.

When the thermometer registers 100 degrees in the shade it takes the cars on the East river bridge, New York, seven feet six inches longer than when the thermometer is at zero. The same difference in temperature causes a difference of two feet and six inches in the length of each cable.

WANTS AN OFFICE.

Montana's Knight and Pretty Candidate for Attorney-General.

The speaker of the house attorney general for a big state is among the possibilities in Montana. The people's party have nominated for that office Miss Ella G. Knowles, the only woman lawyer in the state. The older parties have not yet made their nominations for state officers. The constitution does not say that the attorney general, or any other officer, for that matter, shall not be a woman.

Miss Knowles is about twenty-eight years old, was born in Northwood, Rockingham county, N. H., and is the daughter of David Knowles and Louisa Knowles. Her father still resides in the old homestead in New Hampshire, in what is known as the Northwood Narrows. She was a child when Miss Knowles was 14 years of age. Miss Knowles graduated from the Northwood academy at the early age of 15, and one year later from the New Hampton literary institution. She read law in the office of Hon. Edgar Aldrich, of Concord, N. H., and was admitted to the bar of that state in 1883. She never had a client, but worked with father and mother. She was Gen. Grant's favorite soldier, and died just after the surrender of the Army of the Potomac. She then left Portland in New Hampshire, and went to Dakota, where she remained for two years. She then went to Helena in the fall of 1887. She taught school there very well, was married in some village cemetery, and then left the family tomb. However, the mother and father of Gen. Grant are buried in Spring Grove cemetery, Cincinnati, one of the most beautiful of western cemeteries. The general's remains are buried there and surrounded by imposing monuments of rich families, beside which the modest little marble slab seems indeed small. The graves are well tended by the management and are always pointed out to visitors, but for years none of the children has been to see them.

The lot is thirty feet square. The monument is of Italian marble with a limestone base, and is now badly cracked by the weather. The monument is designed by Grant himself, he being a clever artist, having painted many pictures when young. The inscription is as follows:

U. Ulysses Grant, born December 27, 1822; died July 23, 1885.

Jesse R. Grant, died June 29, 1873; aged 66 years, 5 months, 6 days.

Hannah Simpson Grant, died May 31, 1883; aged 78 years, 2 months, 21 days.

"Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord."

On another side is the inscription:

Samuel Simpson Grant, both September 26, 1820; died September 12, 1821.

He, however, is not buried in the lot. That has been selected by Grant for his father, Jesse Grant, who died in the seventies while Ulysses was president. He lived and died in Covington, across the river, where he was made postmaster by Grant, which act of nepotism was raised against his son. The mother died in Elizabeth, N. J., in May, 1883, and her body was brought here for burial by the general, his sister, Mrs. Cramer, and other relatives. The funeral was held at Elliott's hotel, and nothing but the burial service was had at the grave or in Cincinnati. The Inside the six-by the casket was opened to see if the embalming had done his work well. It was a strange sight, the opening of that small coffin containing the clay of a man who was known in all America's greatest grounds. Rubber boots, assistants and the undertaker only were present. The widow, daughter of another and son could be easily traced in the dead face, and so remarked. Then the body was taken to a modest home on Clark street, Bishop Vincent's house, and there it lay in state the entire day and evening, with the closing of the burial service and a prayer, the body was taken to the cemetery and laid side by side with Gen. Grant was, as were the unmarried, and with the exception of the family and a few friends the funeral was private.

BURIED IN CINCINNATI.

The Last Resting Place of Gen. Grant's Parents.

The Modest Monument Designed and Raised Over Their Graves in the Beautiful Spring Grove Cemetery—Historical Notes.

When Chauncey M. Depew is his recent oration on Grant spoke of his parents' modest graves in "the country churchyard" he used a figure of speech, no doubt, to denote the contrast between their final resting place and that of their distinguished son. However, the mother and father of Gen. Grant are buried in Spring Grove cemetery, Cincinnati, one of the most beautiful of western cemeteries. The graves are surrounded by imposing monuments of rich families, beside which the modest little marble slab seems indeed small. The graves are well tended by the management and are always pointed out to visitors, but for years none of the children has been to see them.

UNIVERSAL TRUNK

Can Be Used for Carrying Luggage by Land or Water.

This trunk, which has just been invented, does not differ in appearance from any other ordinary trunk. It is covered with good strong canvas, has an inside tray and is built within the dimensions prescribed by steamer regulation. The edges are made waterproof by an excellent layer of rubber filling. The top and bottom of the trunk have a round opening, which is closed by means of slides easily removed in time of danger. Otherwise the trunk is arranged in the usual way for holding the wardrobe and valuables of the tourist. In time of shipwreck it can be made to float, as it is converted into an excellent lifeboat which braves even a heavy sea. In that case the tray is opened, the luggage is removed and the contents which it is necessary to save squeezed into the side compartments of the trunk. A watertight cover is then drawn over the opening and the contents which it is necessary to save squeezed into the side compartments of the trunk. A watertight cover covering folded around the bottom ring is drawn up and pressed into the slide around the top circle. Then the trunk becomes perfectly water-proof. Ropes passing through both ends run into the center hole and draws the trunk up to his hips by means of the handles. He now needs only to jump into the water to brave its dangers without difficulty. The tests which have been made with this ingenious life-saving apparatus have yielded the most satisfactory results. When leaping from a high bridge surfaces the body does not become entirely submerged by water, head and shoulders remaining above it.

The trunk, when in use as such, carries easily 300 pounds, and when in the act of serving as a lifepreserver the two compartments, which are in perfectly water-proof by the caoutchouc mantle, can still hold several hundred pounds of luggage, the shipwrecked tourist carries with him.

THE IOWA BUILDING.

It Will Be an Ornament to the World's Fair Grounds.

The plans for the Iowa building were designed by the Josselyn & Taylor Company, architects, of Cedar Rapids.

The building will be covered with glass sides and the exhibition of the state will be arranged in the center, where a space 125 feet will be left open to the public. The main building will be of two stories 84 by 168 feet, but the construction will be such that the whole building will be of the same general appearance.

It is estimated that the united building will afford 16,000 square feet of space, of which over 9,000 feet will be in the pavilion.

The main entrance will be at the south end of the portion to be erected and will face the wide driveway at that point. At either side of a wide overhanging gable will be entrances very similar to that on the pavilion are provided. To the left of the entrance is the ladies' parlor, a large room furnished with reclining-rooms adjoining. On the opposite side is a general reception-room, with toilet-rooms adjoining. Between is a wide reception hall. Further on is the secretary's room, a writing-room, smoking-room and gentleman's parlor. The second floor will be reached by a steep, sloping roof, something like that of a Swiss chalet. It will be cut up, however, by gables and windows and the effect will be striking. In the center of the second floor will be an assembly-room 40 by 50 feet with a 16-foot ceiling. At the side near the north end will be a small gallery for musicians. On this floor will also be the press-rooms, a press-room, in which to keep files of the state papers, and a library and reading-room. Here the State Historical society will have its headquarters in the large circular room at the southeast corner of the building. The parlor, and adjoining the assembly-room will be the reporters' room.

Colors in Chinese.

The Chinese superstitions about fancy and unlucky colors is one that foreign merchants must observe when they attempt to sell their wares in China. The color of black paper as a wrapping for articles has militated against their sale in China, and the most unlucky combination of goods intended for export is red, white and blue, as suspicion

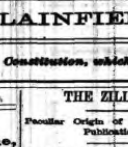
THE ZILLDEE.

Peculiar Origin of a Successful Publication.

How a Woman's Wit Saved Her Husband from Ruin and Made Him the Owner of a Prosperous Business.

[Special Letter.]



HUMPLER was exchange editor on a great daily in Chicago. Of course he didn't edit the "exchange," for an extensive spreading of his labor would have been impossible. But what is known by exchange editor, in this particular instance, is that Trumpler carefully looked over all the newspapers that came to the office and cut out jokes and gems of verse and pathos and snake stories. Then he "exchanged" for a paragraph and therefore a high estimate was placed upon his judgment; he believed himself a genius and consequently he was regarded as profound. And this is usually the way in all divergencies of life if a man isn't one thing it is more than likely that he is another.

Trumpler married a bright little woman who had married a district school. She read Browning and threateningly shook her finger at Trumpler in his dullness, but she was picturesquely fond of her husband—indeed she did make a picture of him every night in the evening she put all household—or rather Bathold—cares aside and helped Trumpler gough—and stray bits of twenty-one mean sense and brightness from the great bundle of newspapers which he had brought from the office.

"Why do you credit all these beautiful things to 'exchange'?" she asked, one evening.

"Because I don't know where they originated," he answered; and after a moment thus went on: "In the old school readers every mother's son of those days would have been set down to the credit of old Anonymous, but as newspaper people believe that old Anon. has reaped quite enough in the path of glory, and consequently we credit unknown things to exchange."

"Yes, but it is a pity that the author should thus be robbed of his honor."

"Of course, but it can't be helped. No one in the world could keep track of a third of the quaint things that go bobbing around from one newspaper to another."

"I suppose that's true," she replied, and then, musing over a clipping in front of her, "but it is commonplace to give 'Exchange' all the credit, and I'm going to see if I can't throw a little honor on this vexed bone of drudgery. Now, you hand all the pretty scraps of literature and blighter rollickings of humor over to me and I will credit them as my taste may suggest, while you may pay your dear exchange to all the rural exaggerations and false political prophecies. Will you?"

"I will. Here you are." He handed her a number of cuttings. She read them, then threw them all there away, and on a slip of paper which she pasted on the others she wrote this cognomen: "Zilldee."

"Why, what's that?" Trumpler asked, taking up one of the cuttings.

"Don't you see?"

"Yes, but, Zilldee—what does it mean?"

"It means quite as much as exchange. You let it go as I put it, and don't be people wondering what sort of publication Zilldee is."

"By George, that's a joke, ain't it?" Trumpler laughed. "Fun, why a shoot of monkeys escaped with a baboon won't enter into competition with us."

Trumpler had been brought up on a farm and the "shoot" of monkeys "escaped" with a baboon was pretty much what might have been expected.

"Here's a letter that belongs to the Zilldee," she said, handing him a vivid description of a burning steamboat.

"Good. Got anything else?"

"Yes, here's a little poem. Won't we have fun," she cried, with a shudder of ecstasy.

"Yes, but don't you give it away to anybody."

"Don't you be alarmed about me, but take care that you don't give it away, as you term it."

Several days later the managing editor came into Trumpler's room, and after stirring up the pile of newspapers on the table, said:

"I'm looking for a copy of the Zilldee. My wife told me to bring it home. Have you got the last number?"

"I don't think so, sir," Trumpler answered.

"I never saw a copy of it," said the managing editor, "and don't know that I ever should have thought of it if my wife hadn't asked me about it. What sort of a looking rat is it?"

"Oh, very nice looking paper, sir; very nice."

"Sort of a magazine, ain't it?"

"Well, rather, rather not that order."

"What day does it come in?"

"Well, the truth of it is we don't get it on a regular day—I buy it—I saw that we needed it, sir, and I decided to get it. It's what we call an occupied one of those things that strike to the surface of print, you know."

"Well, you'd send a boy out and get a copy of it. My wife says it must be the brightest thing in the country."

"Now what am I going to do?" Trumpler mused after the managing editor went out. "Hell send around, and the newsboards will say they never heard of such a publication and then he'll come back and say: 'Here, I'll show up.' And that afternoon the managing editor did come in and say: 'Look here, that Zilldee can't be found. Where do you get it?'

"The truth is, I don't get it at all," Trumpler answered. "My office is somewhere and belongs to me."

"Well, I wish you would tell her that my wife is very much set on a copy of it."

"Yes, sir, I'll do so with pleasure."

Trumpler told his wife when he went home, "I don't know what the deuce we're going to do," he said, "the managing editor's something," she answered, and then she sat for a long time.

"Suppose I—"

"Suppose—"

"Suppose I—"

"Suppose I'm the next one of those fat Shot Towers?"

"What!" said Trumpler, opening his mouth and holding it open.

"It's a sort of fantastic dummy. Get an old-looking newspaper of some sort and bring it to me and I will have a dummy for the managing editor."

He jumped up stepped his hat on his head, gave his collar a despondent looking look and disappeared. Pretty soon he returned with a sort of sixteen page concern, agricultural in literary tone and with a barnyard cast of art.

"I'M DISCHARGED" SAID TRUMPLER.

"I've got it right here. It's got enough stuff to chip off one hand and leaves room for another one; and say, we'll have to make the date line show that it was printed before ushered of town. See?"

She sewed and pasted, and when she got through with it what an artistic bit of work it was. The lettering of the Zilldee was catchily fantastic, and no one could have told that the date line was not fresh from an obscure printing office.

When Trumpler went to the office the next day he found the managing editor waiting for him.

"Do you know," said the great but obscure man when Trumpler entered his sanctum sanctorum, "that my wife has almost bothered the life out of me about that Zilldee. Did you get a copy for me?"

"Yes, here it is."

"Thank you. Humph, what a caperhe-hee! It's a gol—fired picture of a cow, too. Fall seeding, eh? I don't see any jewels. Where's the gun department?"

"Zilldee is the Zilldee is not grouped," Trumpler replied.

"Seems not. Well, it will appease the madam anyway."

And it did appease her effectually, for she threw the thing down in disgust, so the managing editor told Trumpler, and declared that she never wanted another copy of it brought into the house.

And now the newspapers throughout the country began to talk of that wonderfully bright and strangely mysterious publication, the Zilldee; and questions regarding it were published in the story papers' answers to correspondence. One editorial writer on a great reform journal declared that a new land in American literature had been struck; but, of course, some slanderous critics said that, while the Zilldee was in the main an honest exponent of thought and literary finish, yet at times it was guilty of most flagrant slang.

One evening Trumpler went heavy-hearted to his home; and when his wife asked him the cause of his fallen countenance, he hoarsely answered: "I'm discharged."

"Discharged! Why, what for?"

"Oh, they want to cut down expenses and the Zilldee has got to take the reckon. Don't know what I'm going to do; every office in town is full."

"There's one office that is not full," his wife said, with sudden brightening.

"What office is that?"

"The office of the Zilldee."

"My dear, I wish you wouldn't make sport of this serious matter."

She shook her finger at him. "You are charmingly stupid," she said. "Now, look here. We have a few hundred dollars, and can start a small paper called the Zilldee. It already has thousands and thousands of dollars worth of advertising and—" He caught her in his arms and, swaying with her to and fro, said:

"I'm fool enough to make a fortune," and this is really the origin of one of the most successful publications in America.

BURNERS FOR LAMPS.

Berlin, Germany, the World's Center of the Industry.

Precursors of Manufactures — The Labor Question in Germany—Bill of Fare of a Berlin Mechanic—The Workmen in Society.

[Special Berlin Letter.]

One of the most important industries of the German metropolis—and one in which every American is more or less interested—is the production of burners for kerosene lamps. The ordinary flat burner, which was considered a veritable wonder when petroleum illumination was first adopted by the peoples of the civilized world, is a thing of the past. New and improved devices by the score have been thrown upon the market. Yankee ingenuity taxed itself to produce something which would attract the best light at the least expenditure of fuel. The patent office at Washington contains hundreds of models, each of which seemed marvelous to the people of the past generation. The almost perfected incandescent gas and electric light seriously crippled the lamp industry in the United States and Industries, gaunt and ghastly, sought other and more profitable channels.

In Europe, however, the lamp industry became still the most popular business of the day. Tentonic ingenuity has evolved a thousand and one changes which have completely revolutionized the methods of manufacture. Where in fact, even a decade ago, there was a single specialty there are now hundreds. Speaking the other day with a gentleman who is connected with one of the largest lamp burner factories in Berlin, I learned that there is a constant struggle for the mastery in the manufacturing world. He said that there are 10,000 persons employed in the industry, and that the wages paid to them amount to 3,000,000 marks annually. The factory in which he is interested employs 1,000 persons, and has a capital of 1,000,000 marks. The concern has been in existence for twenty-five years, and has always been successful. The factory is one of the largest in the world, and its products are sold in every part of the globe. On the first day of my interview with the gentleman I visited the factory, and was shown through the various departments by a polite and intelligent guide. The first room visited was the one in which the metal is cast. The metal is an alloy of copper and zinc, in proportion of 3 to 1. It is hard to afford. To secure fine shadings in color and other effects, however, copper is sometimes substituted in small quantities.

The models for the bodies of lamps are designed by artists and formed in clay. The model-makers of the factory imitate the patterns in plaster of paris or wood. From this counterfeit the cast is taken. For a bronze cast the mold can be used but once. As a rule, a mold is made of sand. For expensive process, the zinc cast is employed in the manufacture of cheap lamps. This latter product is afterward bronzed or gilded in the finishing room by the galvanic process in an skillful a manner that the two cannot tell the differences between the genuine article and the imitation.

In an adjoining room an army of workingmen fit the various parts of the lamps together. The next department is occupied by the workers in brass sheeting. The sheets are cut by gigantic shears and given the form in which descend with indescribable force. Tubes of various sizes are produced with wonderful rapidity, separated and made smooth. Thus prepared all the metal parts are transferred to a chemical department where they are placed in a solution of acids, cleaned and tested. Before the brass tubings reach the men who form them into burners they have assumed a bright appearance.

From the skilled fellows who give life to the hitherto crude metal the burners pass into the hands of the soldiers, and from these they go to the finishers in whose interests are placed the brass and bronze articles turned out by the factory. If a deficiency of any kind is discovered, the finisher removes it by a ready application of his file or returns the damaged part to the soldiers.

The cutters perform one of the most interesting operations in the creation of, lamp burners. Each one stands before a table and with automatic precision cuts two hundred little holes, in changeable form and two distinct shapes, in the rim of the burner. In other workman places two brass rings around the burner and yet another process a round plate to fit over the whole, ornaments the edges with the aid of an intricate machine and inserts the cogs for hold the different parts together firmly.

Girls are employed to put the finished lamps into shape, to pack, mark and to distribute them through the storerooms. The women and women generally. The lamp industry have to work hard for very small pay. The labor is said to be exhausting. The constant inhalation of brass dust shortens life and undermines health. As a rule, the factories are not model establishments. Workmen employed in the manufacture of the more expensive grades of goods earn from $7 to $8 per week. The less fortunate have to be satisfied with $5, $6 or $6.50, according to their skill. The girls in the packing department can make from $4.50 to $5.50 per week.

Much has been said in the United States about the superiority and more sanitary condition of European manufacturing plants. After an extensive tour through England and the continent I am justified in making the assertion that no self-respecting American workingmen would work in such holes as are set apart for thousands of the toilers in Berlin, London, Brussels and other trade centers of the old world.

This leads me to say a word or two about the mode of living of European workingmen. Take those men employed in the lamp industry, for instance. Most of them live in tenement houses and pay from $5 to $7 rent per month. In order to make both ends meet, they have to deny themselves a score of the luxuries which have become necessities to the mechanics of America.

"I have meat on my table twice a week," said an intelligent lamp worker to me, "usually on Wednesdays and Sundays. We buy our bread at the bakeries from soldiers. We have four children, the oldest now being thirteen years of age, and the youngest seven. They go to school, and by denying ourselves we manage to keep them clothed decently and reasonably well fed.

"Do we drink beer? Yes, we spend about four marks ($1) a week for beer. Sunday afternoon I take my family to a beer garden where they have a good concert. When we have beer we have neither tea nor coffee.

"Of course, it's hard to save money, but still my wife has managed to lay up about 1,000 marks ($250) in the past ten years. Others have done better, but we had some misfortune in our family and once I was sick out of work for a month. Then I had to borrow money."

Further inquiry revealed that the one good day in this man's family consisted principally of farinaceous articles, such as oatmeal, ground barley and sprouted wheat. Beef is served only on extraordinary occasions, such as strictly anniversaries, holidays and birthdays. From thoughts of the festivities in which they participated even the Sunday afternoon concerts slowly receding, the conversation point to the thirty-gotten (zoological garden).

My informant and his family, despite their limited bill of fare, appeared to be happy and healthy. Not one of them showed a trace of poverty. The utmost which the American workingman could

THE WOMAN OF FASHION

Advice to the Girl Who Has Delayed Going Away Until Now.

Blouse and Bicycle and Mountain Suits—How to Get a Practical Bicycle skirt—A New Paris Gown and a Shoe Slip.

[COPYRIGHT, 1892.]

The girl that hasn't yet bought her blazer suit, but has left it until she shall leave for the country or seaside, in August, is feeling very jubilant, for they can now be secured, and good ones at that, for a mere trifle. It is wonderful how the price of them has fallen, and the economical girl is sure to provide herself with one, if she has not done so already, for she will always look well in a neat dark blue blazer suit of good cut and fit, and a pretty flannel or silk shirt front. A good serge is a joy forever. There's no spoiling it, and with an ample supply of pretty waists one doesn't get tired of wearing it. There are a great many ways to make the waists, and the dear little fellows are only suggest some new idea in that line.

For a bicycle suit also, serges are generally the material selected for very fine quality, or some heavy day the fair rider will be greatly distressed to find her skirt blowing in every possible way as she rides in the face of the wind. Bicycle skirts, also, should not be made too scant. A scant skirt, after short half an hour's riding, works itself up over the knees in a very uncomfortable fashion. A good piece have it scant is at the back, and this allows also of little more length there than would otherwise be given, and the longer your bicycle skirt is, the prettier it looks when you're riding. Have it quite full in front, and this, although it will not look pretty off the wheel you will find it very comfortable and becoming when you are mounted. Flannel is a very bad material to use; it catches and tears very easily if by any possibility it is caught in the pedal, while a heavy serge won't be apt to.

Corduroy is a good material in a light weight; the heavy qualities are too hot over the knees gracefully. Gray or dust color is an excellent shade, for seen on the dusty roads it looks neat, while dark shades goes all splashed and untidy looking. For a bright, sunshiny day, however, dark blue or black is the best color, for a woman is always inclined to look much shorter and broader on a wheel than she actually is, and of course a light shade will only heighten this ugly effect.

Never wear any undershirts with your bicycle suit; they're insonvenient and unnecessary. Turkish towels, reaching a little below the knees, with pretty ruffles, are much more satisfactory. In summer light cotton ones are delightfully cool, and in winter heavy ones worn over close-fitting underwear are warm enough for the coldest day one rides out.

Unfortunately, we can't have many pretty furbelows on our bicycle skirts. If we do, sooner or later we'll come to grief when they catch and wind us all up in the wheel, so that we have to be unwound or else cut loose. It isn't at all pleasant, either, to be thrown from your wheel when the aforesaid winding up begins, but it happens very often when a girl is rash enough to indulge in frills on her skirts. Even braid is a trifle dangerous, though it makes such an improvement in the suit that the effect yield to the temptation of using it. Of course, in the matter of pretty waists and blazers we may indulge ourselves to any extent we please.

Mountain suits, also, are most suitable plain, fairly heavy cloth and gray shades, neatly trimmed with a few rows of narrow soutache or silk cords laid on flat. Braid is too fussy.

I saw a startling combination this morning of a blue blazer suit and a deep orange-colored silk waist with a very full plaiting down the front. The girl wore blue-colored suedes also and bright tan shoes.

Plaid dresses are growing more and more popular. One sees them even on evening occasions worn by the swells, although they certainly look fine to see and hold their own. A pretty white serge won by a girl at Narragansett the other day had a very dark red vest and a red and black belt of the same color, run, top and bottom, with three fine gold bands. At the bottom of the skirt was a band of Isabella took pleasure in increasing the number of her vassals, that she might have more to bestow upon those souls, whereby to swell the ranks of true believers upon earth and of the elect in Heaven. Ferdinand had his own ideas of the growth of the church and of Christianity, but above such selfish considerations he had a clear conception born of domination and conquest. Daughter of a learned king, and of an English mother, who died heart of regret, Isabella had a clear perception of ideas and lived in a constant state of exaltation. Both of these queens were and very king John II. of Aragon, and of a species of masculine and ambitious mind. Ferdinand had the ideas of the Machiavellian statesman, of political and personal subterfuge, of duplicity—the ideas that have come down to the present day and that have to add to his royal house and to his own dignity by conquest and by marriage.

Isabella was a Spaniard of Spaniards and her ideas of the Spanish character and of Spanish nationality were those of a Spaniard. Ferdinand was a Spaniard, but he was also a Catalonian, a Sicilian, a Neapolitan, a Sardinian, a Navarrese, and he had the ideas of a man who had to deal with all these nationalities. Isabella was a Spaniard and a Castilian, and was a Spaniard and a Castilian, and was a Spaniard and a Castilian, and WHO PAYS THE PIPER?

When the enormous increase in the rate of duty on tin plate as legalized by the McKinley tariff bill was proposed, the prediction went forth from Republican leaders that within two years the production of American tin ore and finished tin plate would be amply sufficient to meet the demand for home consumption and free the country from foreign importations.

A new era was to dawn upon American industry and a prompt impetus given to American labor.

The allotted period has about passed away, but the McKinleyite prophecy remains a myth.

Now Senator Aldrich, of Rhode Island, a deep-dyed bounty protectionist, ventures to extend the time two years longer for the reaping of an abundant tin harvest.

The Senator is dubious just as reliable a prophet as were the Millerites, who for fifty years, from time to time, positively declared the world would soon come to an end, yet the same old planet on which we dwell continues to flourish and revolve as of yore.

The tin mines of fabulous richness were to be at once unearthed in various sections of the United States, and gifted fairmaiding plains erected, but the Engineering and Mining Journal, not a partisan, but scientific and trade paper, after saying—"The tin mining industry of this country is in a flourishing condition; in fact it is very unsatisfactory," goes on to specify certain mining localities, in Dakota, California and other States, where efforts have been made to develope tin ore, but without encouragement as to quality and quantity.

The extravagant duty on tin plate, like many other duties, was concocted for the benefit of specially favored interests. Foreign tin ore can be imported and manipulated in this country, and American steel and iron plates, manufactured to secure largely enhanced tariff profits, dipped into the preparation and palmed off, with loud huzzas, as an exclusive home product—a protection bon infant.

Who pays the heavy cost of such luxurious protection?

The farmers who need roofing for their buildings, laborers and workmen carrying dinner pails, housewives using culinary utensils, druggists, medicine, artisans, consumers of canned goods, and in fact the entire industrial masses.

They are the high and wrongfully taxed many. They pay the McKinley piper.

Of a truth does the Democratic platform denounce such styled protection to be a fraud upon the honest people.

A free and full opportunity for every wage-earner to obtain employment and receive just reward for his or her services, and for all tradesmen, mechanics, artisans, manufacturers and farmers to pursue their respective vocations and enjoy the fruits of individual industry and enterprise, unmolested and unrobbed by necessary combines of any kind, is Democracy.

A prominent New York lawyer, and heretofore an active political Republican, has renounced allegiance to that party because of its tariff hypocrisy. He believes in protection, "provided its attendant advantages are made universal and not special." That is the Democratic creed to a dot—protection for the many and not for an exclusive class.

Congress has adjourned until December. The Democratic House passed a bill placing wool on the free list, a measure urgently demanded by the industrial interests of the country, but the Republican Senate refused to concur.

Astronomical glasses are now pointed at Mars and interesting views taken, but no telescope has yet been invented of sufficient power to bring into sight the foreseeable labor pay promised by McKinleyism.

The tax rate in the City of New York this year will be lower than it has been for the past decade, which is a most unanswerable argument in favor of the efficiency of Democratic financial management.

Low-Rate Excursion Excursions.

The announcement that the Northwestern line, comprising 6,000 miles of thoroughly equipped railway, has arranged to run two low-rate harvest excursions during the months of August and September, will be gladly received by those who are interested in the development of the great West and Northwest, as well as by those who desire to visit this wonderful region during the season of the year when exact demonstration can be made of the merits and advantages it offers to homeseekers and those in search of safe and profitable investments.

These excursions will leave Chicago on August 30 and Sept. 27, and tickets can be purchased at the very low rate of one fare for the round trip to points in Iowa, Minnesota, North and South Dakota, Nebraska, Wyoming, Colorado, Utah, Idaho and Montana. They will be strictly first-class in every particular and will be good for return passage at any time within twenty days from date of purchase. Full information concerning rates and arrangements for these excursions can be obtained upon application to any railroad ticket agent, or to W. A. Thrall, G. P. T. A., Chicago & Northwestern Railway, Chicago. 8 11 2t

The 4th Rate Will Prevail in Another Particular.

The decision of chancellor McGill in the famous Job Male will case has been issued in pamphlet form, and the lawyers have already exhausted the first edition. They agree that it is, without doubt, one of the best and most valuable legal documents that has been handed down by a judge in many years.

MR. DOUGLAS'S SECOND APPEARANCE.

This Time Upon It to Affirm Him the TRUE FRIEND to the Right of the Colored Citizen.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—The pro-bodicot visit of a young woman of this city and myself to the post-office on Friday, the 5th inst., resulted in my arrest, by warrant issued by Justice Nash, charging me with having taken a sum of money she alleges to have lost in the lobby of the store on that day. Mr. Reed, after a stance associating my name with the misfortune this young woman alleges to have sustained upon that occasion, had me obtaining a warrant, and, after release on bail, and hearing before and discharge by justice Nash yesterday, most of your readers are doubtless familiar. The fact when he had deigned to notice me at all—that I "walked leisurely on the street, went along as if he (I) had nothing to do," and upon this I was arrested—that after I had sought to obtain my detention and further annoy me. That such trifling testimony, backed though it was by Mr. Reed's unbounded endeavor to head off my action for damages against his clients, was or no avail, is attributable solely to the honest judicial sense of justice that Mr. Nash,

GROWTH OF SALVATION WORK.

Prominent Plainfield People Join the Army at Asbury Park.

A special meeting was held the Salvation Army hall Friday night. Ensign Edith Marshall, who has charge of the auxiliary department in New York city, was in command of the meeting. A large and sympathetic audience was present, and the service was one of interest and power. The testimonies were bright, and the hymns were sung heartily by the audience as well as those on the platform. Conviction was marked on many faces as ensign Marshall spoke and read the words of Bonder of old. Many left their seats urging all present to do so. At the close one seeker came forward.

After the meeting, a new member was added to the auxiliary league of the Salvation Army. The league now has twenty-five members in Plainfield, many of whom are well-known leading people of the city. It is hoped that before long the number will be more than doubled. Persons of note are joining all over the United States and the auxiliary league has their interest and money to aid of the Salvation Army. Among those are Dr. Lyman Abbott, Prof. Briggs, Dr. De-Costa, Dr. Henry Wilson.

Weighed Tons, But Crashed to Gee.

Thursday afternoon while some boys in Scotch Plains were having a merry time hoisting a large cylinder to a Bullock press, the "fall" broke, precipitating the cylinder to the floor. Luckily no one was injured, although several had narrow escapes.

I have had cancers for twenty years, and used all kinds of remedies without relief. Mr. Hale, of Dr. Hale & Son, Chicago, advised me to try Swift's Specific. Taken internally and applied to the sores, it has effected the first permanent cure. The cancer has entirely disappeared, and the skin is smooth. It is nearly a year since I took the last bottle of S. S. S., and there has been no return of the disease. I am entirely cured, and feel that I owe my life to S. S. S. It is soothing and pleasant, and does not contain a trace of mercury, potash or arsenic.

FAMED MYRTLE GROVE.

Sir Walter Raleigh's Irish Home in the Market.

A fine old Elizabethan house of great historic interest is in the market, says the Mail Hall Mall Budget. It was offered for sale by Messrs. Lumley the other day, but no sufficient offer being forthcoming the property was bought in. The house in question was the residence in Ireland of Sir Walter Raleigh. It was built by the great navigator in 1585, upon part of a large allotment of land granted to him for services in putting down the Desmond revolt. The house is situated in Youghal, in the county of Cork.

It is impossible to tell how long the ancient homestead will stand in this quiet retreat. Its site is many miles from Youghal for two years, and he was certainly visited by his friend Spenser in this his Irish home. "In all its glory," writes Mr. S. C. Hall of the garden at Myrtle Grove, "beyond question have been read poetic ideas of the Irish poet, long before the world became familiar with the divine conception—

> At whose approach the soul of Penarch rose.

For here, certainly, the immortal bard held communion with his "dearie friend" and brother poet, whom he described as "the sonner nightingale"—

> Himselfe as sullein in that art as any.

In the garden there is a group of four aged yew trees, which tradition states to have been planted by Raleigh; and where the enquiries no stretch of fancy to believe that he has many a time sat, read and talked, or lolled in the summer time. Passing of 22 Dora'o, in the vain search of which he sacrificed his fortune, and ultimately his life."

The grounds appear to be remarkable for the luxurious growth of myrtles, bays, arbutus and other evergreens. Some of the myrtles from which the place received its name exceed twenty feet in height. Here also the first potatoes ever planted in Ireland were grown; and also the first tobacco plant imported by Raleigh. Few, one knows the story of the servant maid who emptied a pail of water over her master, thinking him to be on fire. Whatever truth there may be in the tradition, there can be no doubt that the first pipe of tobacco lit in Ireland was smoked here. The house will thus be seen to be of unique historic interest, and it is to be hoped that it may fall into the hands of an Mohammedan, who will deal as carefully with it as appears to have been the case in the past. Offers have been made for sale Sir John Pope Hennessy, whose widow is the present tenant.

DUSKY GIRL BRIDES.

Maori Maidens Often Marry at the Age of Thirteen.

The young Maori women are often very good looking, with splendid black or dark brown eyes, masses of black hair—never wool—snow-white teeth, and supple, round, well-shaped figures and limbs. They develop very early, a girl of thirteen or fourteen being quite a woman and often a mother; and, as they get older, they soon become corpulent and ponderous. They are of a laughing, good natured, amiable disposition, and there is no harm within the sphere of their charms say they have wonderfully seductive ways.

It is a very common for white men to marry Maori girls; but the instances of white women marrying Maori husbands are extremely few. The latter women are a very handsome race, some of the girls being perfect Venuses. They are said to combine all the vices of both the Europeans and the Maoris with none of the virtues of either; but that is altogether too severe a judgment.

Many of them are as good as they are agreeable, and are married to Maoris in the Cosmopolitan. They are usually delicate and the women bear few children, if any; so that there is no likelihood of a mixed population springing up to any large extent. The process is, perhaps, one of which the Maoris, too, are unconscious.

Neither Boy Nor Girl.

In connection with the announcement of the birth of a child to Constance Hadley, the following incident in connection with the birth of his father is recalled: Mr. Hadley, at the time, was living in the town residence in Park lane to learn the news. "Is it a boy?" he called out to the nervous Hadley who opened the door. "No," quoth Jeames, "What is it, sir?" asked the old friend became much interested. "Bless me, then what is it?" The flunky pondered and replied: "It's a heir."

RAGING AT NIGHT.

An Experiment Tried With Complete Success at St. Louis.

A week's trial at St. Louis has demonstrated the fact that the running of an electric light is no longer a matter of speculation or experiment. The results of the Missouri Electric Light and Power park show that the scheme is eminently successful for all standpoints. One evening a number of the reporters and guests present said went away satisfied after visiting the park that what they could be successfully carried out profitably, like any other form of amusement, a fact which the public will attempt to run horses at night by artificial light is not a late one. It has been tried repeatedly before in Germany and France and England, but the St. Louis Post-Dispatch says never with any great success.

The course by night presents a striking picture. Everything is dazzling white; stands, fences, posts, in fact everything around the place that will stand a coat of whitewash has had it and treated to a bright coating of white. Under the steady glow of the incandescent lights the effect is heavenly. Around the track at a height of twenty feet runs a wire strung like the trolley on an electric railroad. Along this at 4 distance of twenty-five feet are strung clusters of incandescent lamps. The space between them being so short that a man walking under them would cast no shadow on the ground. There are four large lights at the corners, and the space between is filled in by those on the trolley. The power for these is furnished by a dynamo in the basement below. In addition to the electric lights there are a number of gas jets, which are placed to illustrate the fact that These powerful lamps throw a very penetrating ray, making the gaudy colors of the fancy clothing as distinguishable as in the daytime. The grand stand at the north end of the track is capable of seating 5,000 people, and the crowd that assembled at the novel sight until one of the boys suggested that a gas-night be a good thing for the band and started for the camp after one, but before he could get back his side had plunged over the fence almost to the stand. Everything except one lone star was covered up in the mass of stars of light, and he could be seen but faintly. The rest were promptly deserted and the whole crowd swooped down on it with such force that the most intense darkness followed.

BLAINE'S SUCCESSOR.

A Popular Member of Presidential.

Hon. John Watson Foster, the New Secretary of State.

Mr. Foster is an Indianian, having been born in Pike county, March 2, 1836. He received his education at the Indiana state university and the Harvard law school, and began the practice of law at Evansville in 1856. He served through the war, was private secretary of Grant and Sherman, and was commander of the advance brigade of Sherman's army in Sherman's march to Tennessee. After the war Mr. Foster became editor of the Evansville Daily Courier, and was appointed postmaster of that city in 1868. His diplomatic experience began in 1873, when he was sent by President Grant as minister to Mexico. He was reappointed to that position by President Hayes in 1880, but in 1881 was transferred to St. Petersburg, which post he resigned to attend to private business. He established himself at Washington, where he

He negotiated a commercial treaty with that country, which, however, was rejected by the United States senate, and was withdrawn by President Cleveland. Since that time Mr. Foster went on a special mission to Japan to secure negotiations on a modified treaty, but he was unsuccessful. During the administration of President Harrison he has been constantly consulted about the conduct of foreign affairs and has occupied the most confidential relations with the president.

to his fellow and the rest of the convoy. This method of dealing with a people whose only or principal offense seems to be that they will not enroll themselves as members of the Orthodox Greek church, will come as a revelation to Magdeburg readers; but, unfortunately, the facts are only too well attested. Where the Jews endure the least hardship they are permitted to live more or less unmolested; but the minute legal restrictions which ban in every section of the Jew, and compel him to obtain police sanction for everything he desires to do, renders him a ready subject for blackmail, and he can live only by bribery. The degree of misery to which the people has now reached that stage where bribery is impossible. Hence the restrictive laws are enforced with all possible rigor, and the Jews are now being sent to the "Pale" in larger numbers than ever. CHEAP FIRE ALARM.

The Quaint Device Now in Use in a New Jersey Town.

The present illustration is taken from the fire alarm at Boiling Springs, opposite Rutherford, N. J., says the Scientific American. The machinery for striking the gong or ring was made by a blacksmithof the town. The gong is held up in place by means of a ¾-inch wire rope which goes around the gong and over a heavy piece of timber at the top of the tower. The striking apparatus with bearings, as shown, is secured to this piece of timber. These bearings are made of 2x3, bar iron and the striking material mostly of ¾-inch round iron. The L-shaped bell crank, with shaft, is forged in one piece. The lower section of bell and shaft is made and joined together by means of a piece of ¾-inch round iron with a forked connection at the top and bottom. This piece of iron runs through a piece of gas pipe which is bolted to the floor as a stepper. One end of the lever works inside of a yoke which is bolted to the side of the building. To throw the clapper or hammer in the lever is drawn upward, which throws the upright part of crank with forked connection backward, which in turn forces back the clapper. By pushing the lever down the clapper strikes the gong. The gong is 6-foot tire of a driving wheel of a locomotive, is 1½ inches in thickness, 6 inches in width and weighs 300 pounds. It yields a deep tone like a bell. On a still night it can be heard about two miles. The clapper weighs about forty pounds.

A Great Sufferer.

One of the latest novelties invented is an electrical grass killer for use in destroying grass and weeds along railroad tracks. The useful form of electrocutive is the invention of a Memphis (Tenn.) man.

A Man of Feeling.

"Beg pardon ma'am," said the tramp on the back porch, removing his hat, "but can you spare a bite? Just left your door the collector for the ice company."

"It was, sir," replied the lady of the house, wonderingly

"I did not recognize him at first, but I suspected he was connected with the kind. He had a bill, perhaps?"

"He had a bill, I paid it."

"Then madam," rejoined the tramp, his eyes moist and his chin trembling with sympathetic emotion, "please do not add to the desolation and misery of an already devastated household! I will carry my trouble elsewhere. Let me refer to some more fortunate neighbor."

And he drew his shiny costumes from his eyes, and, with a sympathetic sob, backed down off the porch, clambered over the line fence on the left, and disappeared.—Chicago Tribune.

He Weighed His Words.

He was a young preacher, or rather his sermons were ponderous, and the young people of his congregation were proud to complain of them.

"I always weigh well what I say in my sermons," he said to a fair young parishioner with a smile of pride.

"Indeed!" she responded, quickly. "Do you ever buy scales?"—Detroit Free Press.

DR. G. C. OSGOOD,
Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."
DR. J. F. KINCHELOE,
Conway, Ark.

The Centaur Company, 77 Murray Street, New York City.

Castoria.

"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it superior to any prescription known to me."
H. A. ARCHER, M. D.,
111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their respective practice with Castoria, and although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as regular products, yet we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."

Hard of Hearing.

A German professor, whose first book was published at least thirty years ago, was sitting on the left-hand side of a lady at a public entertainment. The lady remarked to her right-hand neighbor:

"I find that the professor is very hard of hearing."

"Yes," was the reply, "he quit talking about him and his book."—Texas Siftings.

An Unimportant Item.

He (after an elopement from boarding school)—You led me to infer that you would inherit a hundred thousand dollars.

She—No, I didn't. I said my father was worth that much.

He—Well, but you never said a word about having fourteen brothers and sisters.

She—I didn't suppose you wanted to marry the whole family.—Judge.

Poverty and Wealth.

"When that man came to this town," said a resident to a visitor as an old fellow passed them, "he was so poor he didn't have a shirt to his back."

"He doesn't look to be any better off now," remarked the visitor, noting the rich attire.

"Oh, but he is," quickly explained the native, "he's rich. He's married, and he doesn't have to wear one."—Detroit Free Press.

Disincorrected Advice.

Jack (to his wife)—I think of getting a musical instrument, Maud. Say, perhaps, a cornet.

Maud (in dismay)—Oh, and not that horrid thing.

Jack (in surprise)—And why not, dearest?

Maud (blushing violently)—It makes the lips so hard.—Puck.

Collecting Statistics.

A northern paper asked an old negro who was the driver of a cart to which was attached a venerable mule:

"How old is that mule, my colored friend?"

"He am like yerself, boss, pretty well on in life."

"But how many years?"

"Same as you, boss, only two."—Texas Siftings.

It Would Fetch Him.

Tourist (in Kentucky)—That gentleman sitting on the fence is the most tacitum person I ever encountered. Though I have tried almost every imaginable topic of conversation on him, I am utterly unable to draw him out.

Landlord—That's Col. Goer; try a coniaceous sub.—Puck.

Matrimonial Amenities.

"Even the grip has its good points," said pretty Mrs. Jones; "it's apt to make a charming widow of one."

"Well, it'll never make a charming widow of you," said her grumpy husband; "I'll marry three before I'd let it do that."—Binghamton Leader.

Disappointment.

She placed in a wooden box some dainty mignonettes.

And placed it in the window where the sun was very hot.

And when time transplanting came she found, to her disappointment,

A lovely crop of Hubbard squash, the pioneer's food delight.—Judge.

He Presumed to Ask.

Young Brokaw—Miss Kitty, may I presume to—to ask you—

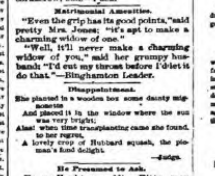
Miss Kitty—La! Mr. Hankinsoul This is so—so—

Young Hankinson—To ask you if my necktie is straight?—Chicago Tribune.

The Happy Maiden.

She (still blushing)—Am I the first girl you ever kissed?

He—No, darling; but you are the last. She—I really? Oh, George, it makes me so happy to think that.—Life.



A POSER FOR FISH LIARS.

The next time your friend brings home this sort of proof of his success as a fisherman tell him that the camera is the greatest liar on earth, and ask him to explain why his thirteen-ounce pole is not bent.—Chicago Mail.

A Conclusive Doctor.

A.—Dr. Schmidt is one of the nicest doctors in the city. Very frequently he attends cases and never asks them to pay the bill.

B.—You don't say so!

A.—Yes. He sues them instead if the executor doesn't settle it promptly.—Texas Siftings.

An Unusual Month.

Wife—I received a bill of yours from the club this morning for twenty-five dollars. I didn't know you spent so much money at the club.

Husband—That was the month that baby was teething.—Puck.

Twins and Twisters.

Jennie—What was the text your minister preached from to-day?

Pearl—Don't know. The texture of the dress in the next pew was so interesting that I didn't follow the sermon.—N. Y. Herald.

A Change of Implement.

Twyrn—Barbers don't do leaching as they used to.

Triplet—No, they do their blood-letting with the razor, instead.—Detroit Free Press.

A Doubtful Impression.

She—I am so afraid of you newspaper men.

He—Why; are we so bad?

She—No; but there is no telling when you are going to press.—Judge.

He Didn't Worry.

Miss A.—Don't you feel a heavy draught?

Mr. Z. (blandly)—No; I let it go to protest.—Life.

Still There.

"There's gas escaping," said Bunting, sniffing the air.

"No," replied Larkin, also taking a sniff; "it seems to be here yet."—Judge.

LOW-PRICED COTTAGE.

A Comfortable House of Neat Design and Reasonable Cost.

The accompanying perspective and floor plans represent a cottage of neat design and moderate cost. As will be seen by examination of the floor plans the house has many good rooms and reception hall and pantry on first floor. With these are found a sitting and bedroom on second floor. The stairs are broken by square landings, which add to the comfort and convenience in ascending. An upholstered seat is placed at the foot of stairs. From the hall you enter the parlor through a wide sliding door. The dining-room is also connected with the parlor by sliding doors. These doors may be kept open and the opening hung with heavy portieres. The parlor is furnished with a grate and mantel and grecian steamer. In the dining-room is a projecting window with diamond sashes. The sideboard is placed between the dining-room and kitchen and may be used as a place through which to serve meals conveniently. The connection of the dining-room with the kitchen is also through the sideboard. The kitchen is well fitted up and placed in the kitchen convenient to the dining-room. A well-stocked pantry connects with the kitchen by an arched opening. Each room on the second floor is furnished with ample closet room. A cellar extends under the kitchen and hall and is reached by stairway from the outside and the pantry inside. The outside foundation walls are of stone 18 inches while the interior cellar walls, ash pit, and chim-

Magnetic Properties of Oxygen.

Commenting on Prof. Dewar's recent experimentals verifying the strong magnetic properties possessed by liquid oxygen, Dr. Guillaume points out, in L'Industrie Electrique, that a tube filled with waines found by Edmond Becquerel for the magnetic constant of oxygen. If ought, when in the liquid state, to have a field of medium strength, to possess a magnetic moment per cubic centimeter one-third that of iron, and a magnetic moment per gramme twice as great as that of iron, so that the storage capacity, sion is forced upon us that oxygen is the most magnetic of substances. M. Guillaume points out that when liquid oxygen might be made to give a faithful and delicate representation of the distribution of the lines of force in a magnetic field, the liquid being heaped up in the strong places.

Still It Sticks.

The centrifugal force developed by the earth's rotation tends to throw bodies off its surface as a stone is propelled by a sling, and in consequence of this fact 1-290th of the weight of every particle of matter lying along the equator is employed in counteracting this force.

Only One Stood.

"If I understand you," said the lawyer to the man who called to consult him, "your cow was thrown from the track at a street crossing by a locomotive on the N. Y. & E. road, and you want to bring suit against the company for damages?"

"Yes, that's right."

The lawyer made a memorandum.

"Valuable animal, I presume?"

"Fairly good cow. Hadn't no bad tricks. Good milker."

"What breed?"

"Two of 'em."

"You don't know. Was she badly injured?"

"Fatally injured? Why, she was killed dead's a mackerel."

How Young Hopeful Counts Loans.

"You can't count your fifteen cents for those berries, while up street two blocks they are selling the same fruit at ten cents! How is this?"

And the young housewife looked searchingly at the dealer with her keen gray eyes.

The man faltered an instant and then, finally meeting the sharp orbs of the inquirer, replied in a firm voice:

"These are hand-picked berries, ma'am."

"I beg your pardon," she said meekly. That being the case, give me three quarts, please."—Detroit Free Press.

Sorrow Consolatory.

She (on her bridal tour)—Oh, Dan, I'm so unhappy.

Dan—Why, what is the matter, darling?

She—Hi! am so much to you as you say, you can't be sorry your first wife died, and that makes you too lowful for me to love.—Life.

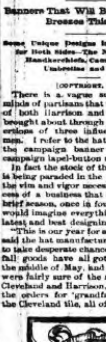
STOVE POLISH MANUFACTURERS.


were given out. We kept on manufacturing till the first of June, when, with almost a million hats in stock, the Blaine boom began. Well, to say that we were all of a cold perspiration is putting it mildly. We simply sprinted up to Minneapolis, and every hat dropped over in the business gave vent to an amount of depth of exhilaration that we dreamed of by the ordinary political howler.

We howled in the morning, we worked in the afternoon and we prayed at night. Well, Blaine was beaten and the campaign hat trade was saved. Of Cleveland's nomination we were fairly certain all the time, and we felt a great relief daily to read that latest announcement by William C. Whitney: 'You can feel absolutely sure that Cleveland will be nominated on the first ballot.'

But in the way of banners some really fine work is being done. I dropped in on Nagele the other day, the famous political banner artist, and found him busied over two exquisite pieces of work. One was intended for the Union League club and the other for the Hide and Leather club—a gathering down in the swamp. The first named is a massive piece of canvas with a centerpiece of Washington's hat, resting on the American shield, while an eagle does its swearing over all. At each side are pictures of Harrison and Reid. The design for the Hide and Leather club is democratic. A screaching eagle rests on a massive shield, while about each picture clings designs of a mythological nature.

The inscription on these was very plain, simply 'For President' and 'For Vice President,' then the names, and on top the words 'Regular Republican (or Democratic) Nominations.'

It is in the button that the designer has given himself full swing in the way of captions. On the democratic side he sings to the tune of 'Tariff for Revenue Only.' 'Free Trade is Labor's Best Protection,' 'Public Office a Public Trust,' 'No Coercion! No Force Bill,' and on the republican side he has played on the phrases 'A Full Dinner Pail and a Fair Count,' 'Uncompromising Protection,' 'Protection for American Labor,' 'Protection Builds Home Industries,' 'Reciprocity,' 'Reciprocity and Sound Money,' 'The Party of Prosperity.'

Money, 'We Built the New Navy,' etc., etc. Of course the buttons are worked into every imaginable design, the clever ones having the flag button. The 'Cleveland Lads' idea is embodied very prettily in a horseshoe design, in which rests the picture of the ex-president. The buttons have been appropriated by the republicans, and it is made in cloth, in a brass ware design, and in the shield, all presenting some republican partisan caption.

But the campaign idea has delved into strange fields this year. It is worked into pretty neckwear and into headwear. Some of these latter are extremely pretty, having the picture of candidates worked into the "H. and H." or "C. and R." hat bands. The vote for the republicans is a pretty design in flag-colored stripes, and that for the democrats is a blue band with Cleveland and Stevenson in a rather large-figured horseshoe. Badges are not much in style, although those still produced by some are no less than the campaign parasols. Among the pretties I saw were those of white silk with portraits of candidates woven in black, while the designs are in red and blue silk. Short pins are in vogue in design as the lapel button, but were worn in some of the latest embodiments, like Gen. Horace Porter, will wear two lapel buttons and a scarf pin, and possibly a silk hat. Badges are not worn, but that is carrying party fervor to an unwonted extent.

As in campaign coats, suits and shirts that the old stock comes into play. They are busy getting out all the "Blaine and Logan" and "Ex" which stood for Morton or Thurman last year.

The latest style of the clothing manufacturers: "If they had nominated Morrison at Chicago and Tracy at Minneapolis for the respective vice presidencies we would have been in splendid shape to use even the lettering of four years ago, for we would simply have twisted it around. But there are a great many shirts which have the full names 'Cleveland' and 'Stevenson' on them, and, of course, in these there is no change.

Campaign suits are made of Canton flannel and are about the same for both parties, with the exception of the names or initials. The Norfolk blouse will be sold in all colors. So will the double-breasted sack, the square, the marine, the army and the pioneer Knit. This last is peculiarly a Harrison affair. It consists of the old style coat and pants worn in "Tippecanoe" days, bear skin hat, leather apron, belt and the pioneer torch. These, too, are the costliest of the campaign suits in the line now ranging at $6 each. The cheapest is the Norfolk blouse suit, which will sell for $1.36. The "Continental" campaign suit is made of dark blue cloth, trimmed with buff, and consists of coat, vest, Knickerbocker leggings and three-cornered hat. This suit will cost the partisan $4.50, but the orders for it are already very numerous, and it will be frequently seen in the parades.

Capes will be worn as much as ever—and these will cost, as high as $2 for the Havelock and $25 for the 19-inch design.

And there are helmets and caps of all sorts and descriptions for campaign wear. The white leather-capped hats for republicans will cost $15 per dozen, while the bearskin shakos come to $30. For democrats the fur has already all but disappeared from view. This is the old buccaneers. In opposition to it the old Continental hat will be sold out four years ago, and this still flourishes.

Then there are umbrellas, which will be a great feature of this campaign. Last campaign the republicans carried the flag design and the democrats the red bandanna design. This year the last has been changed to a unique new figure in red, white and blue. In canes the old designs remain intact.

There are no changes in torches or flambeau outfits and all the old material will be "in full swing" again.

Crops in Hayti.

The soil of Hayti is very fertile. Corn is easily grown and three crops can be raised annually.

School Enrollment.

The total school enrollment of the United States last year was 14,000,000.

Some Unique Designs in Legal Business for Both Sides—The New Campaign Handkerchiefs, Campaign Suits, Umbrellas and Canes.

[COPYRIGHT, 1892.]

There is a vague suggestion in the minds of partisans that the nominations of both Harrison and Cleveland were brought about through the clothing assertions of three influential bodies of men. I refer to the hat manufacturers, the campaign banner men and the campaign lapel-button makers.

In fact the stock of the last campaign is being paraded in the market with all the vim and vigor necessary to the success of a business that flourishes but a brief season. Once in four years, and we would imagine everything to be of the latest and best designing.

"Is this the case for a real big profit," said the hat manufacturer, "but we had to take desperate chances. You see our fall goods have all got to be made by the middle of May, and at that time we had no idea of the nomination of Cleveland and Harrison, and, of course, the orders for 'grandfather' hats and the Cleveland tile, all off the old blocks were a drug in the market. So we kept on manufacturing till the first of June, when, with almost a million hats in stock, the Blaine boom began. Well, to say that we were all of a cold perspiration is putting it mildly. We simply sprinted up to Minneapolis, and every hat dropped over in the business gave vent to an amount of depth of exhilaration that we dreamed of by the ordinary political howler.

TOUCHES OF LATE DESIGN FOR THE CAMPAIGN.

JAMES J. HILL.

requiring his signature he merely indorses "S. S." Mr. Sloan's hair is abundant and white as snow, his eyes are as bright as diamonds and his face is the bespeak the building that he is.

He has a typewriter—male, female and mechanical—and writes all his own letters in autograph with a big gold pen. No wonder that some of his epistles are short and curt.

His enerable secretary handles some of the routine correspondence of the executive office, but his chief duties are confined to opening and arranging the mail and entertaining distinguished bores who are turned over to him.

Unimportant letters received are thrown in the waste basket. After the writer has waited in vain a week or two for a reply he is supposed to realize that his proposition has been turned down.

For the Trunk Line association, which manages to maintain rates and regulate methods, Mr. Sloan is a heavy cross to bear. The old gentleman is proverbially fussy and, while getting on in years, is vain and fads, persistently fails of fulfillment. When he is taken to task he feigns astonishment, and threatens dire vengeance upon his subordinates, who, he explains, have not carried out his instructions.

"When we get Sloan on the gridiron," said a Trunk line president, "and apply the inquisition in a manner that would make Depew, King or Roberts cry for blood, what do you suppose the old man does? He leans back in his chair, by jingo, and goes to sleep."

Mr. Sloan rules the Lackawanna with a rod of iron. It is emphatically a one-man institution, and he is the one man.

The old gentleman has a warm spot in his heart for the clergy, and the Lackawanna issues annual half fare permits by the hundred, all of which bear Mr. Sloan's personal signature, and, in accordance with one of his many peculiarities, these are filed not personally by General Passenger Agent Holwill with a gold pen.

While an absolute ruler, Mr. Sloan is noted for his fatherly watchfulness over his oldest and most faithful employes, to whom he extends all sorts of delicate kindnesses, usually disguised as imperative orders, given with eccentric bluntness, as if the old patriarch were ashamed to show that there is any tenderness in his make up.

As a rule of ruining a reputation for veracity, as yet in a fair state of repair, there has been none equal as that of Jay Gould. Mr. Gould's personal characteristics, in the language of Wall street, have been severely criticised and short until they are on the verge of bankruptcy and a receivership. He de-pours lambs and wolves, regardless of kids and horns, but he is an ideal man in his home, and a considerate employer.

A favorite general officer of one of Boston's crack militia regiments died in New York a few years ago, and was jumped up by the Little Wizard as follows:

"They tell me you are broke and don't pay your debts. What is the matter?"

The astonished officer sputtered out:

"It costs me a great deal to live," he replied. "My family is large, rents are high and doctors' bills have been considerable, but things are not as bad as you seem to think."

"I'll see," said Gould, handing out a stock for one thousand dollars. "Take the cars to Congo and sell this to you it in the market as he sees fit. Come back here when he tells you to."

The man obeyed. It was an exciting day in Wabash, and he returned to Gould with six thousand dollars.

"So you've been speculating," exclaimed Gould. "Don't do it again. That's what ails you fellows who don't know what you are about. You better go home now."

The fortunate speculator bade Gould good-by with profuse thanks and started.

"Haven't you forgotten something?" called Gould.

"I don't know."

"Where's that thousand dollars I lent you this morning? It seems to be true that you don't pay your debts. Remember, my boy, the essential thing in business is to keep up your credit."

The embarrassed officer paid the thousand dollars, and it has never been necessary to do him for anything since.

The most autocratic railroad king in America is James J. Hill, of the Great Northern. He used to be a coal dealer in St. Paul, and when he became interested as an experimentalist of a baby road called the St. Paul & Pacific. This grew into the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba, covering the wheat country, and now, under the Great Northern, has Hill's system extending from Minnesota and into the Canadian northwest, and will soon reach the Pacific coast. Mr. Hill's system is the most completely equipped and complete at the rate of eleven miles a day.

The Great Northern is rich and Mr. Hill controls it absolutely. He is a man of marvelous energy and has no use for a subordinate who cannot keep up with his high pressure gait. He has the disagreeable trait of cutting off official heads without mercy, and the proverbial salutation in the St. Paul general office is: "Who is missing this morning?" But the last decapitated gallivanting there is an occasional gleam of humor.

In Allen Manvel, now president of the Santa Fe, who was formerly general superintendent of the Great Northern, Mr. Hill caught a Tartar.

Manvel found a handsome young man in his office one morning and pleasantly asked him his business.

"I'm Mr. Ives," was the reply, "your new assistant."

"Why, certainly," said Manvel, "I didn't expect you quite so soon. Your quarters will be arranged at once."

Ives soon became devoted to Manvel and Manvel to Ives.

Things went on this way several years, when one day Ives informed his chief that Mr. Hill had asked for his resignation.

"I guess not," replied Manvel. "Mr. Hill hired you without my knowing it, but he can't discharge you unless I say so, and I won't. You keep on working."

And he did.

It is understood among passenger men that it is necessary to post a half-sheet card on some telegraph pole where the president and directors will see it and run a flaming advertisement in the particular newspapers which they read. In fact, it is no more essential to reach the president and directors than the public.

Cornelius Vanderbilt used to be noted for taking this sort of superficial interest in advertising, and when the Michigan Central began its career in self as the "Niagara Falls route," the boys put up a job on him.

They got a single picture of one of their trains passing the falls and hung it in a Newport hotel while Mr. Vanderbilt was at his summer home. The bait caught and the Michigan Central's passenger department was highly complimented on its effective and extensive advertising. Probably not one passenger had seen the picture.

E. B. Thomas, of the Erie, is a conscientious and impartial disciplinarian. His personal sympathies are with the rank and file of employes, and no man in America has done more to overcome the feelings of hostility usually arisen through misunderstandings between capital and labor. He has managed several railroad properties besides the Erie, and decided numerous labor difficulties, with acknowledged justice to all interests.

He is emphatic in his demands for temperance among employes, and never permits wine or liquor in his private car.

"I must practice what I preach," he says, "and if I drink while on duty I cannot consistently compel trainmen to do otherwise."

Mr. Thomas introduced the policy of, furnishing to the newspapers full reports of accidents where any person is killed or injured. Not only general officers, but division superintendents and train dispatchers have positive instructions to give to reporters every fact regarding an accident as soon as it happens.

This way of doing business has given some representatives of the press opportunities to be extremely sensational, and up to the present time, looking at the matter from a selfish standpoint, the policy may not have been beneficial. Mr. Thomas insists on doing it regardless of results, however, for the simple reason that he believes it is right. In the end it will doubtless also be a practical benefit to the road.

KNEW HIS OLD MASTER.

The Skinny Cab-Horse Awoke to Memory of Better Days.

The following story is told by a London cabman:

"Many years ago a friend of mine, a driver, got the awfullest hiking through his horse having a good memory. It came about in this way:

"There was an old major or captain who lived at Westminster, and he had a horse that was getting pretty aged, but he was very fond of it and kept it until it was blind and so queer in the legs that he wouldn't use it any longer, and he ordered his man to take it and get it shot.

"But the man didn't do it. He sold it to a little cab-master in London for a few pounds instead. Well, the cab-master drove it nights for about a year, and of course it went wuss, and then he sold it to another chap for thirty-five shillings. It was reduced to the rag'lar hobject by that time; but they wasn't so particular as they are now, and the driver was rather a rough customer, and used to carry a whip that was a 'go-reader,' I can tell you.

"Well, one night a fare hailed him on Piccadilly and he drew up to the curb and took him up, but when the old gent got to the blessed brute couldn't stir a peg, but stood like a frozen horse, its only movement being a trembling of the knees. This naturally made I—ve his name was—savage, and finding the thong was no good he lost his temper and took the butt end of his whip to it.

"The gentleman he banged out of the cab and he said: 'You Inhuman scoundrel, what do you mean by flogging a poor beast that's gray?' says he, and no sooner did the old crock in the shafts hear him than it turned its head and began to neigh and whinny just like talking.

"It knowed its old master again, though it did not have any eyes to see him, and the old major looked at the horse and they knowed one another.

"I forget how old he was—the major I mean—but he had I've off the box and down on the pavement before the driver could get his hand to him and the heavy bamboo stick till he roared out murder and brought his crowd around 'em.

"He was going to play old Harry with the major, but his friends advised him different, so he squared the matter by getting a fiver to take charge of him, what the major knocked out to his horse, saying in a polite note that he wanted a couple of pounds agiece for them and that if the major would buy them the old horses should be brown into the bargain. That's how they settled it."—Toronto Mail.

WAYS OF CONGRESSMEN.

How the Various Appropriation Bills Are Passed.

They Originate in the House, But Must Be Indorsed by the Senate Before They Can Become Laws.

Legislative Red Tape.

[Special Washington Letter.]

The principal work of congress during the past few weeks has been the consideration and completion of the various regular appropriation bills, upon the passage of which the executive branch of the government depends most largely, but which are also necessary to the legislative and judicial branches of our system.

The agricultural, army, diplomatic and consular, District of Columbia, fortification, Indian, legislative, executive and judicial, military academy, naval, pension, post office, river and harbor and the sundry civil are the regular appropriation bills for the support of the government, while this year there are five deficiency bills for items dating back as far as 1890 and to come down to the fiscal year. All appropriation bills, under the constitution, originate in the house of representatives.

The highest governmental function of parchment which is handed to the *president of the United States for his signature that it may become a law is a very different looking document to the one originally prepared by Mr. Courts, the clerk of the house committee on appropriations. In the first step towards the introduction of one of these bills, the passage of which is one of the most important and necessary works of our congress, is to formulate a rough estimate of the items for which appropriations are to be made, after shopping by comparison the different appropriations for the same items for the two previous years. This gives an insight into the changes made in appropriations "from year to year, whether of increase or decrease, and is of inestimable value in the formation of a new bill out of raw material. As subcommittees is formed, and, after getting all the light possible on the subject, they sit down, and make up their minds about it. There, after much deliberation and comparison, the looking up of old records and the like, the bill is finally agreed upon by members interested in proposed items, a bill is finally decided upon, the provisions of which shall be necessary to the full committee. After this sub-committee has completed its work, if the entire committee favors it, one of their number is deputed to present the bill in the house and move its reference to the committee on appropriations, from whence it has been introduced. There, in a pigeon-hole, it remains to sleep of the just until the committee is ready to consider it. Its consideration necessitates the appointments of another subcommittee whose business it is to study carefully all of its provisions and give hearings to members of congress interested in the different items. After having obtained all the information possible in the matter, the sub-committee makes its report to the full committee, which generally concurs in the judgment of the chosen few. If the majority of the full committee favors the report it is adopted and placed in the hands of Chairman Holman, of Indiana, who reports it to the house at its next session. It then takes its regular place on the calendar to come up for consideration when ordered by the house. Political leaders generally appear to forget the existence of these very important bills until within a short time before the adjournment of congress. Then they become aware of the urgency of these measures and every effort is made to rush them through, in some cases without giving proper time for discussion and consideration. Over the passage of some of them, however, there is occasionally a bitter fight, notably on the river and harbor bill, and the post office bills. When the river and harbor bill comes up for consideration there are always some members who want large appropriations for improvements in or connecting their districts or streams in their sections. This, of course, necessitates more or less argument and a great deal of time is lost in this manner. It is the same way with the post office appropriation bill. Some member from the rural districts wants the privileges of free delivery of mails extended to its constituency, and argues the point at length.

Bitter warfare is always raging between the members of the senate and house over the question of the legislative, executive and judicial bill. One of the principal items of disagreement is the appropriation for the salaries of the clerks of the several departments of the city. The senate body assert their right to private secretaries, to be paid out of the appropriations for the salaries of the representatives at the other end of the capitol, while not denying that their services are valuable, would be provided with secretaries, insist that they should also enjoy the same privilege. As there are over three hundred members of the lower house, and as their clerks would each receive six dollars a day, that provision would be rather costly piece of legislation, especially in long sessions of congress. This is the way the senators reason, but the members of the less august body do not see it in that light.

When an appropriation bill passes the house its friends are jubilant, having great credit to themselves for obtaining this result and defeating long arguments generally remarkable for the frequency of the pronoun "I," to the various newspapers men who are expected to "puff" them in the papers which they represent. But the bill is even yet far from being a law. It must run the gauntlet of the senate and be subjected to many amendments which the senators in their alleged superior judgment are always ready to make. In the present congress, where a majority of the senators are democrats, and jealous of opposite political creeds, every important bill is changed and modified from its original form.

When the clerk of the house brings the engrossed bill over to the senate, and announces that the house has passed it, the measure is referred to the senate committee on appropriations for consideration. In this committee it is subject to the same delay as in the corresponding committee of the house. It does, however, its order is reached, the committee takes it up, goes carefully over every item, hears testimony from concerned parties, and finally makes its report, which is usually amendatory of the bill, whereupon by unanimous consent it is generally taken up for immediate consideration, instead of lying at the foot of the calendar behind all o the unimportant bills. The consideration of each appropriation bill is the greatest deliberative body on earth usually takes several days, and sometimes weeks. rejection of some item or amendment. Upon the question of the final passage of the bill, the vote of every senator is recorded upon the journal so that their constituents and the country at large may know exactly how they stand on the question of economical appropriations. After the bill has passed the senate it is taken to the house, which is informed that the senate has added certain amendments to their original measure. Then a committee of conference on the disagreeing items of the two houses is appointed by the speaker and the vice president. The committee consists of three senators and three representatives. These committees usually meet in the room of the senate committee on appropriations, and after the walls of that handsome apartment have heard such language as they never heard before, and after getting all the light possible on the subject, they sit down, and make up their minds about it. FISHES THAT BUILD NESTS.

The "Gouramis" of Cochin China, Which Make Nests of Bubbles.

"One of the queerest fishes in the world is the 'gouramis,'" said an ichthyologist to a Star reporter. "It is native to the fresh waters of Cochin China, farther India, Java, Sumatra and Borneo. Specimens have been known to attain a length of six feet and a weight of one hundred and ten pounds. The flesh is so delicious that efforts have been made to acclimatize the creature in many other countries, but thus far these attempts have been successful only on the island of Mauritius. About thirty of them were imported into the island of Cuba and planted in ponds prepared for the purpose. Although they grew and were healthy they did not breed. Accordingly, after awhile the proper impregnating of the species became so hopeless that the governor had them served up one by one upon his table upon state occasions. The same difficulty has been met with elsewhere.

"The 'gouramis' are chiefly remarkable for the fact that they build nests like birds. At the breeding season they pair off, each couple selecting a spot among water plants and forming a nearly spherical nest, composed of a peculiar kind of floating weed. The nest is usually about six inches in diameter, its construction occupying the fishes for five or six days. Where they are propagated their task is made easier by placing in the water branches of bamboo, to which bunches of the grass referred to are attached. The fishes imitate this grass and with it make their nest in the submerged branches of bam

A TYPICAL AMERICAN.

"If I am to name the typical American, the man who loves and believes in his country beyond everything else, the man, who, determining once in what direction his duty lies, cannot be deterred from the path—the man who is doggedly persistent in what he believes to be right—the man who thinks not of self, but of his country and its needs, I would name Grover Cleveland. What he has accomplished is the very highest attribute to the possibilities of American citizenship. A country lawyer in the city of Buffalo, he shed lustre upon the high profession which he had chosen. As the mayor of his native city he presented as his record a clean and economical administration. Coming into the highest position in the land without previous experience and without scarcely a precedent to guide him in the conditions which surrounded him, he won the affection of his party and commanded the respect and admiration of his opponents. I find myself in one of the proudest positions of my life in being permitted to present to you Grover Cleveland as a typical American."—Chauncey M. Depew, the distinguished Republican leader, Oct., 1890.

ANTIPODAL.

Monopoly is capital consolidated and wielded for avaricious gain and supremacy regardless of individual rights and privileges.

No matter by what name called or by what reconstructed, monopoly is a standing peril to the liberties of the people of this country.

It is the battle of might against right, the strong riding rough-shod over the weak.

It has no more affinity with the principles of free American than personal freedom has with the heartless despotism of Russia.

We hold these truths to be self evident—

That every American citizen, irrespensive of worldly condition, and clear of design or stain, stands upon an equality before the law, and cannot be justly discriminated against by law or its evasion.

That all laws passed for the special emolument of any particular class or interest, at the expense of other classes and interests, are dishonest and disloyal to freedom.

That every person possesses the inherent right to carry on such legitimate business pursuit, however humble, as he may see proper, and to receive and enjoy the reward thereof without question, hindrance or suggestions on the part of any human power.

That Monopoly and Democracy are directly opposite.

CONFIDENCE FORFEITED,

Mr. William D. Foulke, of Indiana, an ardent Harrison man of four years ago, and honestly in favor of Civil Service Reform, now withholds support from the Republican Presidential candidate for the following pointed reasons:

"President Harrison has removed men upon worser charges, without opportunity for defense, explanation or denial, in grossest partisanship.

"He has appointed men solely upon political considerations.

"He has disregarded the fitness of the men appointed.

"And he has secured his renomination by the votes of his own officeholders."

Consequently, Mr. Foulke, like thousands of other independent Republicans, will this year vote no confidence in Benjamin.

WHO WILL WIN THE PENNANT?

A Brief Words of Expert Baseball Along the Home Stretch Just Ahead, and a Few About Those to Be Played.

The day before the season opened, I addressed myself to the patrons of baseball through the columns of THE PRESS, telling them that they would this year have a baseball pennant race in the National League base-ball league as they ever saw in their lives. In my predictions I was not wrong. The people of the four towns that have been given National League associations for the small sum of twenty-five cents, and yet the games have not been attended in any great shoptal. This is not in keeping with the idea of booming the attendance in the next five games but only to show that the efforts of Messrs. Whitney, Brush, Hewitt and Reed are not appreciated as they should be. These gentlemen have, at the expense of their business, given valuable time to the management of baseball clubs, and have taken long journeys to get good players, and have individually spent money enough to pay their club dues for a life time, but they haven't a "do" for it. Nothing at all! If their team is winning, well and good, but perchance they happen to lose a game, they and they alone are to blame.

Take for instance the last Crescent-West Side game. Anderson was put in to pitch. He proved to be a dead one. Miller relieved him and did well. The Somerville cranks denounced manager Mack for not putting Miller in at first—the baseball reason why he was not put in. This is one of the unpleasant features of managership. How did Mack know that Anderson was not in form? A pitcher who will work one day, pounded for three hits in one day, may be pounded for twenty the next. That was proved last Saturday in the case of Francis of Orange, who was the only pitcher in National league who can pitch two days alike? Who was more to be pitied than manager Mack after the third inning with the West Ends. Upon him came the whole brunt of the battle. He was the man who was blamed by the Crescent league for not playing Miller, and yet Charlie stepped into his carriage after the game I thought I saw a look in his eyes that said he wished himself anywhere else than where he was. At Cresson for instance, enticing the finny beauties from the quiet waters of his fish preserve.

Manager Coding of Westfield is the man who has suffered most. He, early in the season, gathered around him a ball team that everyday upholds the honor of Westfield. His men were of the star order and yet they have played in the hardest kind of luck. Games which were clinched by them have been lost at the last inning wrested from his grasp by phenomenal playing on the part of the other fellows. There is a story called baseball luck, and when you hear it you hear it. This little tale seems to fit exactly the condition of the Westfielders during the present season. Look at last Saturday's game. It is the only one that presents every minute something of interest to loot out at.

Lucky Coding did not have shown to a better advantage than at present. The warm weather, tempered by evening showers, has made the flowers and plants look their best. Mr. Hofford has spent thousands of dollars in flowers, and it may be said no private place can exhibit such an abundance and variety as is shown here this season.

A few words may be said about the managerie, which contains some of the finest specimens of animals and, perhaps, the largest number of any zoological garden in the United States. This year an island has been allotted for their display and it is one of the young lions to be met on the aquarium also, where some rare specimens are shown.

As for yourself there is the sun-bake, the shade of the trees, the rocks overlooking the water, or "Little Germany" with its old castle, imported beer and music on the other.

The new steamer Wm. C. Egerton is now running regularly. This is the largest and handsomest excursion steamer afloat.

ANOTHER BASE SLANDER.

The Somerset Street Shoot Still Reluctant—Plainfield's Fair Names at Home and Abroad.

The News is still engaged in its dirty work of maligning Plainfield's fair name. Last Wednesday's issue says:

"It is reported that there are several cases of 'black diphtheria' on Lake street among the poor people, and the fever here is also raging in the same neighborhood. The place is quarantined."

This paragraph has been developed into sensational articles in all over the State and country, and the following statement is circulating everywhere to the detriment of Plainfield's good character and prosperity:

"Cases of 'black diphtheria' have been reported in Plainfield. The disease is confined to the Italian settlement on Lake street and this section has been quarantined. Several cases of scarlet fever have been reported from the same neighborhood."

Needless to say, the story is an utterly unwarranted fabrication. The Health Board is highly incensed over the malicious slander, and its officials are ready to speak in denunciation of the News for its abominable work. Whenever anything

I absolute injury to Plainfield appears in print, it is safe to assume that the Somerset street shoot is responsible for it. The present case is only a sample.

Cautious.

Imitations have been put upon the market so closely resembling ALCOCK'S POROUS PLASTERS in general appearance as to be well calculated to deceive. It is, however, the general impression that when they compare with ALCOCK'S, for they are worse than worthless, inasmuch as they contain deleterious ingredients which are apt to cause serious injury. Remember that ALCOCK'S is the only genuine porous plaster—the best external remedy ever produced; and when purchasing see that the word ALCOCK'S is upon that you get ALCOCK'S POROUS PLASTERS.

THREE NAMED FROM PLAINFIELD.

Will James E. Martine, Joseph V. Tyler or Alexander Gilbert, Bear Be a Congressman?

In the Eighth congressional district, which is composed of Union county, Monmouth, and which returns Governor Werts Mc Kay and hooks in Bayonne, there are several Democratic aspirants, but not many Republicans. It is considered that the gubernatorial made this new district from 1,500 to 2,000 Democratic on a straight party vote. The contest, therefore, is to a considerable extent, and there are four candidates now named in connection with the honor. The leading candidate is James E. Martine, who has frequently stumped the State in National and State campaigns, and is considered one of the brainiest Democrats in the district. He is generally called the farmer orator, and is a powerful political speaker. His friends are anxious to have him go to congress that he might shine in the Republican ranks as represented there and make his sonorous voice heard. Mr. Martine resides at Plainfield and has a number of warm friends in both parties. Joseph V. Tyler, of Orange, is another contestant. He has taken an active part in Essex county affairs for the past twelve years and at one time was seriously talked of as a candidate for governor. James, who was one of the district delegates to the National convention and who is a liberal giver to the party cause, will probably be nominated if he comes his way, but will make no contest for it himself because he believes that if his friends insist on his having it that they will secure it for him. On the other hand his friends think that he has given enough to the party to warrant some consideration at this time.

Col. G. B. M. Harvey is also on the list that some of the people around Orange are discussing. He is now in Europe on the Continental trip. He still maintains his residence in Orange, although he has been living in New York during the winter. The Orange residence in New Jersey he uses he is an aide on Governor Abbett's staff B. Maybourn is another Orange candidate. The Hon. John T. Dunn, of Elizabeth, who has been a county every office in the county, and he never tires of being a candidate, has hoisted his standard on the outer wall with a view of attracting supporters to his camp. It is not likely that Mr. Dunn will receive the nomination. It is more than likely that the contest will be between James E. Martine and G. O'Reilly.

The Republicans have not had a chance yet to discuss the possibilities of their making any show in a district so badly gerrymandered against them. The entire situation is dependent upon who the Democrats may name and if they do name anyone that in the judgment of the Republican leaders would warrant a fight the standard would go to Foster M. Voorhees, who was a distinguished leader of the Republican forces in the house for three years ago. Mr. Voorhees is considered a shrewd young man and it is safe to say that he will only accept the nomination if he considers it worth the contention. Should John Kean, jr., receive the nomination for governor it is more than likely that he will insist on Mr. Voorhees taking the congressional nomination for the support that it will give his candidacy. An effort is being made to get mayor Gilbert, of Plainfield, and mayor Rankin, of the Elizabeth, interested and place them on the list of the available.—Newark News.

MR. ULRICH CAN'T CLOSE THE BREACH.

The Republicans in Monmouth County Still Talking Right Out in Meeting and Reading Rose Would Over the Coals.

That element of the Republican party in Neptune township which is disgruntled because George W. Treat was not appointed postmaster of Asbury Park, expressed themselves very freely at the Republican meeting held there Tuesday night. Mr. Gaskill, of Mt. Holly; State organizer Judd Ulrich, of Plainfield, and colonel Merrill, of Jersey City, each tried to close up the breach which exists in the ranks, but their efforts proved futile. Mr. Gaskill was the first speaker. He said that arrangements are in progress for a grand ratification mass-meeting to be held in the Asbury Park Auditorium during the month of this month. Governor Mc Kinley, Wilhelm Reid, Tom Reed, of Maine, and general Clarkson have promised to be heard and take part in the meeting, which promises to be one of the biggest Republican demonstrations ever held in New Jersey.

Judge Ulrich called the Republicans to throw away personal animosities and jealousies and go in the fight with a determination to elect Harrison and Reid.

Out-and Mr. Ulrich, who is a fine orator, gave a brief outline of his visit to the Minneapolis convention and said that he called the deal which prophesied that Harrison and Reid would be the Republican nominees. In 1888, he said, he predicted that Indiana and New York would be carried by the Republicans, and sure enough they came true. He said that if the Republicans did not carry New Jersey this fall, considerably how the Democratic party had increased taxation and made many new and fat offices, they could never carry it. He believed in the old adage, "To the victors belong the spoils," and that if he was in power every Democratic office-holder would be turned out and their places filled by 9,000 Republicans. Pleb for nearly and hour the disgruntled Republicans indulged in a mud-slinging fusich. Personalities were indulged in, and General Sewell was hauled over the coals for the manner in which he had used the party in Neptune township.

Funeral of Daniel Smalley.

Funeral services over the remains of Daniel I. Smalley were held from the late residence of the deceased at 21 Summit avenue, Wednesday afternoon. The funeral was largely attended, many being unable to gain admittance to the house. The Rev. Dr. D. J. Yerkes, pastor of the deceased, preached a affecting sermon. The floral tributes were very handsome and included an anchor from the employes of the two meat markets of the deceased, a pillow from brothers of the deceased, bearing the words "Our Brother", and a wreath from a neighbor George Randolph. The pall-bearers were collector H. Newton Spencer, ex-collector Elisha VanNorstrand, now of Elizabeth, S. B. Wheeler, ex-borough clerk James E. Martine, B. L. Bradley and George Wells. Interment was made in Hillside cemetery.

There Was n't a Trolley Car in Sight.

At Somerset and Dunellen streets Friday afternoon about 2, a horse attached to a buggy in which was Mrs. Eugene Hoagland and a child, took flight at something and turned the corner so suddenly as to throw the child out first and then Mrs. Hoagland on t p. Neither was hurt excepting the woman who complains of an aching wrist.

There was n't a trolley car in sight. The cause is said to be that the pole of Frank Linke's wagon hooked in the back end of the buggy and slung it around on the horse.

'TWAS INDEED A GALA NIGHT.

COLORED GENTILITY HAVE A HIGH TIME WALKING FOR THE CAKE.

A Raise from Woodland, Attended by a Gallant Plainfield Beside, Carries Off the Prize—Classic Accounts of the Grand Event, from the Pen of Our Sable Society Genius.

[From The Press of August 18.

H IS pronounced indemonstrative of the weather was 12:30 only damper. But that it be stated that the grand concert, cake-walk and ball given by the colored waiters of the hotels Netherwood and Albion at the Crescent rink, last night, would have risen to the dignity of a real Astec jubilee, if the heat had not somewhat subdued the spirits of the promoters, however, so that the slim attendance caused no uneasiness to the management.

In the management of the posters which announced the event, it was "the intention of gentlemen composing the gigantic entertainment combination to make it one of the grandest, most enjoyable, entertaining and orderly affairs ever inaugurated in the State of New Jersey".

It was all this, and more, with the exception of the gigantic part, which was unavoidably left out because of the nonarrival of about two-thirds of the expected guests.

A detachment from Guttman's Music Hall orchestra occupied the music stand.

The concert began with the singing of "Mount Zion" by a quartette composed of the following gentlemen waiters of The Netherwood: Bennie Hopkins, leader; Robert Washington, P. C. H. Tinson and Henry Leroy.

Master Louis Thomas, aged 10 years, caused roars of laughter and received great applause for his clever jig dancing, which he performed oddly enough, during the singing of the quartette, as a sort of accompaniment.

Then came the great event of the evening, the grand cake-walk.

Chairman Thomas G. Leary was the master of ceremonies, and performed his duties admirably, as will be seen later.

The first to step out upon the floor was Joseph Mitchell, a waiter at the Hotel Netherwood; and leaning gracefully upon his arm was Miss Irene Miller of Westfield.

During the walk she was the observed of all observers, for she was a pretty little girl. Her skin was quite light, her features were regular, her carriage was graceful, and her manner was demureness personified. She appeared in a navy-blue yachting costume.

Following them came F. H. C. Tinson with Miss May Jones, Mr. and Mrs. E. F. Peterson, Henry Leroy with Miss Emma Robinson, J. H. Low with Miss Hester Rebb, Robert Washington with Miss L. Parlett, W. R. Dempsey with Miss Gertrude Cornelius; with the following: Miss Weaver, Albert Williams with Miss Annie Spriggs, and Charles Hunter with Miss Clara Thomas.

The judges of the grand cake-walk were Oliver Bridgman, R. D. Farlee, Henry Williams and Wm. Waddell, guests of the Hotel Netherwood.

From the very first it was seen that the contest was between Mr. Mitchell and Miss Miller and Mr. Washington and Miss Parlett.

Miss Parlett was the only unspondered young woman among the participants, and this fact caused intense interest in her favor.

The cake, a large round affair, covered with an abnormal quantity of frosting, was brought out from one of the dressing rooms and placed upon a box in the middle of the floor at the head of the hall. Around this the contestants slowly marched for thirty minutes, keeping admirable time to the music of the orchestra.

After a little, the judges reduced the number of couples to four, and these to two.

After making the remaining two walk twice around the cake, the confession was finally announced to the hills of Westfield, amid tremendous applause.

The judges gave as their reason for their decision that Miss Miller was the prettiest girl at the month. Mr. Mitchell the most "unassuming" of the men.

After the cake-walk the ball began.

Among the hotel guests there were: Mr. and Mrs. William Ogden, Mr. William Ogden, jr., Miss Fairchild, Mrs. Boyd Miller, Miss Miller, Mr. and Mrs. Dempsey, Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Kirk, Mr. and Mrs. Pratt, Mr. and Mrs. Pierce, Mr. and Mrs. Gerken, Mr. and Mrs. Donnell, Mr. and Mrs. Burke and Mr. and Mrs. Harry Williams.

The various committees in charge of the affair were as follows:

Committee of Arrangements—Thos. G. Geary, T. T. Harden, Joseph Johnson, James H. Law, Wm. Dempsey, George Green, E. Hopkins, W. H. Jackson, Jos. Mitchell, Henry Leroy, Robert Washington, E. Little, R. Baker, Thos. H. Fisher, Arthur Chambers, P. C. H. Tinson, L. D. Little, James Talty, Timothy Mercer.

Floor Committee—R. Washington, E. Hopkins, T. G. Leary.

Concert committee—Wm. Dempsey, Jas. H. Law, Miss Baker, L. D. Little.

Reception committee—Jos. Johnson, P. H. C. Tinson, Geo. Green, Henry Leroy, E. Little.

Entertainment committee—Arthur Chambers, Joseph Phipps, Timothy Mercer, Jas. Talty.

Coat and Hat Room committee—Thos. H. Fisher, Joseph Mitchell.

Committee on Tickets—W. H. Jackson, T. T. Harden.

Altogether, the event was a delightful affair, and a notable social success.

BRUTAL STABBING AFFAIR.

A Demolish Laborer Nearly Cut by a Fellow-Workman

A very brutal stabbing affray occurred last Monday afternoon, at Brown's brickyard at Dunellen. During the day several discussions arose over the work to be done by the different hands, each man being allotted his share. A man, whose name no one seems to know and who was employed there, was a little more loud in his threats than the others. He had some words with Edward Conkling, also an employee of the yard, over some work which Conkling wanted him to do. The other workmen kept the two apart at that time. Conkling was not seen again for a short time, when the brute picked him just above the eye.

Although Conkling is not regarded as fatally wounded, he had a very narrow escape, as had the knife entered two inches from the place it did, he would have been killed instantly.

The other workmen caught the would-be slayer and gave him a severe pounding, which is all the punishment he has had up to the present. Conkling will not make a complaint against the man, and he is now allowed to go free.

BIOGRAPHY OF DR. TITSWORTH.

He Would Have Celebrated His Silver Wedding Next Month.

[Dunellen Weekly Call.]

Dr. Abel Shepard Titsworth died at his late residence, in New Market, Wednesday morning, at 11 o'clock, aged 52 years, from heart disease. He was the eldest son of Isaac D. Titsworth, one of our oldest and most prominent citizens. The doctor has been a sufferer from the terrible disease which carried him away, for the past few months. He was born in Shiloh, Cumberland county, N. J., January 21, 1840. When the War of the Rebellion broke out he was one of the first to enlist, which he did on August 14, 1862, at Trenton, in the 11th N. J. regiment, and served as hospital steward, until his discharge, about June 20, 1865. During this service he became quite familiar with the practice of medicine and entered the medical college at Geneva, N. Y., from which he was graduated in the spring of 1867. He then entered Bellevue Hospital in New York city and graduated in 1868. He then went to Edgerton, Wis., and followed his profession for about 1870, when he removed to his native town, Shiloh, and bought out the practice of Dr. T. H. Tomlinson, now of Plainfield, remaining there until 1874, when he removed to New Market, where he has since resided. He was unable, owing to the dreadful disease, to seek for a large practice, and finally abandoned his profession by selling out to Dr. Edwards in the spring of 1885. For the past few years he has done as large a business as his health would allow, and was thus enable him to remain at home and gain a livelihood. He was married in September, 1867, to Miss Posey, the eldest daughter of the late Squire Morgan, and had he lived another month would have celebrated his silver wedding. He leaves a wife, three sons and four daughters, one son and two daughters, who have the sympathy of the entire community.

Repairs for the County Roads.

[Elizabeth Journal.]

Union county is justly proud of its elegant system of county roads, but now that it has these roads it will not do to sit quietly and suppose they will take care of themselves. The road is now rapidly falling into disrepair, and largely from the need of top dressing. The dressing which was put on when the roads were built has worn off, and should be replaced at once, because the larger stones are now in sight, and every time they are hit by a horse's hoof they are loosened and in time will work out. This can be prevented if taken in time. The amount allowed each township, $150, is totally inadequate to do what is required, and steps should be taken by the board of freeholders to have this amount largely increased. Do not let the roads fall into bad condition and then turn our purse into diagnosis.

Kill the State Abattoir Public Service Railway.

[Elizabeth Monitor.]

Plainfield's electric road is a great success, and the people are delighted. Last night the mayor and members of the common council, together with a number of leading citizens, got aboard a car and rode over the route. They were much gratified with the trip, and referred especially to the smoothness of the road. The cars are kept by the Bell Telephone company, of Philadelphia, and are the finest cars ever turned out by that concern. This is the first electric road in the city, and the people express themselves as very much pleased with the line and equipment.

The Cruelty of Lee Trolley a Notable Event.

[Elizabeth Journal.]

This is a day to be remembered by Plainfield. Its first street railway was opened to the public this morning. It is operated by electricity as applied to the trolley system. The road has been put complete the circuit of the place, but only runs from a point in the centre of the business district to a terminal point in the south-west section of the city. It is a notable event in the history of the city, and the people express themselves as very much pleased with the line, and the manner in which it was built. The road is a conservative community and is always disposed to "go slow" in the introduction of public improvements. In the course of time, however, it may be expected that the street railway will traverse every part of the town and its suburbs, to the satisfaction of everybody.

Dr. Pope's Reverse Simulates Sore-Water.

Consumers of city water looked with suspicion on the beverage from the mains Friday morning. When a sleazoful was drawn it appeared and foamed as though there were saleratus and vinegar in it. The taste or quality, however, seemed not to be affected. At the pumping station it was said any of the blue was caused by the heavy pressure of air in the pipes, and that the water was beautiful rather than injured by it. During the day the fleak passed off.

What Kind of a Route Is This?

[The Newark Advertiser has a funny idea of Mr. Sidney's geography in speaking of the new electric street railway it says: "The line is four miles in length, and runs from the depot to Fourth street, thence to Grant street, to Fourth street, to Third avenue and return."

TWO WOMEN BADLY SHOCKED.

THEY WERE ALONE AT NIGHT IN A HOUSE STRUCK BY LIGHTNING.

From a Telephone Girl by Prompt Aid from Electric Bells—F. S. Slater's House Badly Damaged, and Other Casualties Reported—Trolley Injuries—Freaks of the Current.

The fierce thunderstorm of Friday evening will be long remembered in Plainfield because of the terrific electrical manifestations that accompanied it. All over the city people were kept in a state of nervous suspense, fearful that the next of the almost incessant flashes might bring disaster to their roofings. The overhead wires kept snapping merrily, and threw out scathing sparks. Telephone bells kept jingling, and electric lights flashed up again and continued to burn with steadily increased. The density of the unusual current along the wires set fire to the roof of the electric light station, and a small hole was burned, but was soon extinguished. The trolley system was not affected, and cars ran as usual during the storm.

The most serious damage reported was to the residence of ex-councilman F. M. Slater, on Jackson avenue, North Plainfield. Mr. Slater and wife are out of town, and his mother and Miss Lottie Morse were alone in the house. Miss Morse was lying on a couch, and Mrs. Slater was seated in a chair. Of a sudden a tremendous flash of electric heat burst in the very room. They heard no crash, but felt a terrible concussion. Blue lights danced all about, and there was a strong odor of brimstone in the air. The women felt a fearful electric thrill, and were stunned into momentary unconsciousness. When Mrs. Slater recovered her senses she found Mrs. She had been deafened, and her deafness did not pass away for some time. Miss Morse had declared that her many startling experiences with electricity as telephone operator at central had accustomed her to the freakish fluid, but she was thrown into a state of nervous terror by this scare, and fears that she can never regain confidence in her nerves during thunder storms.

Investigation revealed the fact that lightning had shot down the chimney of the Slater house. The current had evidently followed the chimney to the sitting room where were the two women, and escaped through an open window. After electrifying everything in the apartment. The gilt of the wall-paper and picture mouldings was changed to black, and gold leaf was stripped in flakes from the paper and deposited on the floor with another strange precipitation resembling sulphur. Both mirror and picture on the chimney were strewn all about the yard and attic, a hole was torn in the roof, and fragments of the slate shingles were scattered about.

Altogether, the experience was a most terrifying one for the two women, and if telephone subscribers find to-day that central's voice is a little more mild and her gentle disposition somewhat unstrung, they must attribute it to the electrical disturbances of the storm.

Total smashing stroke the house of John Pfister on the Henry Clay Randolph in the short hills, and showered plaster down upon the inmates of the dwelling, as they lay in bed. The chimney was wrecked, and the walls were completely denuded of plaster The smell of sulphur was very strong in the house and family fled through the storm and took refuge in a neighbor's house.

WESTFIELD WARBLINGS.

Another Newspaper Promised, and a New Industry for the Town.

Manager Morse, of Garwood, is a firm believer in faith cure.

Montgomery Clark, of West Virginia, is visiting Mr. Harris at Westfield.

Mrs. C. A. Smith and her son Raymond returned Thursday from the Catskills.

The Rev. Dr. Rice will preach in Brooklyn the remaining Sundays of this month.

Westfield is to have another newspaper, backed up by capital and journalistic experience.

The oratorio of "Queen Esther", or its equivalent, "Ruth", will be produced in Westfield shortly.

G. N. Goding has again taken possession of his residence on the Boulevard, after repairing the damage it sustained by fire last spring.

The New York Domestic Gas Machine company has established a plant in Westfield for the manufacture of their machines. Quarters have been secured on Central avenue, near the railroad.

The Leader misinterprets public opinion when it attributes the Westfield press not object to being called Ripley's Corners. It was bad enough to have that name flung at the town, without having the Leader and the Town Swallow it eagerly and ask for more.

The eleventh annual excursion of the Sunday-schools of Westfield and Fanwood to Ocean Grove, Wednesday, was a success in every respect. The day was good, and when at night the two great excursion trains pulled up to the station, they clang-ged a tired but clean and happy crowd. To many this annual bath proves most beneficial.

Sons of the Trops.

The next tournament of the New J ney Camp of Sons of the Trops will be held this month in Harrison.

A two-day shoot will be held at Miller's grounds, Springfield, Aug. 17 and 18. The first day shoot is at live birds and the second at targets.

A new arrangement was made last week whereby for the next five years, at least, targets and live birds can be shot at the Marion grounds, which was feared at one time would have to be closed.

John Biggott, of Rockaway, and Frank Case, of Morristown, recently shot a match at 100 live birds each for $250 a side for the championship of New Jersey. Biggott won by killing 91 birds to Case's 94. Johnny is therefore now the champion of New Jersey, and also an all-round good fellow.

IN A POLICE BOAT.

Agreeable Adventure in Quest of a River Pirate.

Cutter and Accused the Wharves of New York Search in the Warm Weather—Fortified While Most Good Citizens Rest in Their Beds.

[COPYRIGHT, 1892.]

The Pirate Exchange in New York languishes. Pirates are dull and very scarce. The river police are active, but there are few transactions. Such is the situation along the river fronts as I found it last week.

What I had thought will be more enraging than a sight on the river during this warm wave, pirate hunting with my friends of the Central office? Accordingly, I applied to Superintendent Byrnes, who, with his customary dexterity at once gave his permission and arranged everything. He would, not, however, guarantee me any pirates. Three adventurers, who have flourished from 1850 to 1873 and have assassinated some sort of organization for several years longer, are now all broken up. They are dead, in prison or reformed. Only a few here and there, small a little cotton, coffee or sugar—thefts for which they may be arrested but can seldom be convicted. The new pirates and their heads have added the "finest" in the practical extirpation of the business.

Twelfth Precinct station, hot wave, delayed my trip a day or two, for, though rains and fogs are perhaps congenial to river thieves, I preferred favorable weather. At length came a clear, still, mild Saturday evening. At about 8:30 o'clock I met my friends on the police steamer Patrol, at pier A North river. The sergeant in charge first gave me an appetizing cup of tea, and then showed me over the boat, in which everything looked clean, commodious and ship-shape. The Patrol herself only leaves her moorings when there is a big yacht race, or a naval review, or an unveiling of the statue of liberty, or some such affair causing a great aggregation of river craft. Ordinarily she stays at her moorings, and the shelter of four rowboats which are always on duty also if the river fronts report to her periodically and are regularly relieved. The river police are not a separate organization, but the members of it may be put on or off at any time.

Each boat carries two men in uniform. There is also a detective boat, the crew of which are in plain clothes. To this boat I was assigned. My companions for the night were a quiet, taciturn man of ordinary size, and a young fireman with thews and sinews of a giant, six feet two inches tall and weighing two hundred and twenty pounds.

Our course was up East river. As we rounded Castle Garden a tug came by and we teased her a line to tow. The deckhand failed to hold it, and we had held it fast enough if we'd had our uniforms on," remarked the giant. We secured another on the next boat we pulled in the same way. But by this time we were in the region of the ferryboats, and we followed one of them to her slip. We slipped under her guards and hailed from the inside until we rested in the confined space between the bow (her stern as it now was) and the end of the slip. A line was then made fast to the rudder post, and we waited in the gloom for several minutes while the passengers got off and we barked above. The muddy water swashed about the string piles and dripped from above, and the atmosphere was close and offensive. Presently we heard the dash and splash, the great double wheels revolved and the steamer moved out, dragging us behind in the foam of her wash. As she gained headway the nose up the river she seemed to move at a tremendous speed, and the waves ran up at each side of us in a continuous foaming wall. Thus we swept up the river for ten or fifteen minutes and were cured over with a bath which we could not have rowed in more than thrice the time.

It was a long past sunset and lights were kindled along the docks and over the ferry slips, and the row ran along the thin arch of the Brooklyn bridge. We turned and began feeling our way down the river. Now and then

Just now the admirable new scoring rules of Omar Carr, which were used in the recent tournament at the Country of the Columbia Athletic club in Washington. This scheme consists of reading a number of points for each game, making a possible forty points to each set of ten games. Scholars of the tournament are so arranged that every player meets every other player, and his standing in the tournament is determined by the number of points he scores and not by the number of games won. Each stroke of the racquet counts and the final judgment is rendered on the play of the whole assistance. Entries in the Washington tournament were divided into three sections, and the two leaders in each section were entitled to compete in the finals.

The west has already settled its championships, and the national events at Newport on engaged about to fall into line. Chase and Ryerson again contesting. John A. Ryerson will be the western representative in singles at Newport, and Chase and Ryerson will meet the best eastern team in contest for the championship in the Narragansett tournament. I doubt if either Chase or Ryerson will be able to do much against Hobart, Hall or Howey. Chase's play is swift, strong and brilliant, but faulty. His carelessness will ever be his bane in the east. Ryerson plays with judgment and force, but generally brilliancy.

But August will see the advent of a glorious series of games. On the first of the month the national lawn tennis championship of the National league will be played and the handicap single championship of the Longwood St. at Newport, the "East vs. West double championship" and the "national double championship," in both of which events there will be more interest than ever.

There have been many surprises so far this year, and more are sure to have arisen on the tennis horizon. R. V. Beach, who defeated M. D. Smith, just the latter had won a victory over Beach, is looked upon as an exceedingly clever all around player. Heaton, who is always in at the tournaments, has been ranked heretofore as a splendid player, but he has never yet until now has he been ranked high in singles. I understand that champion Campbell will be back in time for the Saratoga games, when he will defend his title and probably score a greater victory than before, as he will have had a splendid opportunities abroad. One excellent critic, F. A. Kellogg, thinking of the changes in form of Hall and Hobart, said: "A fourth of the year will be the playing of Hobart, Howey and Halligey one of whom, in my opinion, is the best player to date for the silvermers at Newport. These men are likely to play better tennis than they did last summer. I am confirmed in that belief as Dr. Dudley Allen already somewhat improved in form. The new rule as to the position of the server is likely to be a factor of great importance in the contests of 1892. In the case of E. L. Hall its effect will be rather favorable, for he has already adopted the practice of standing over a foot behind the base line. The rule will hit those players especially against Campbell's game, yet I doubt that it will seriously affect it even under the most rigid enforcement."

One of the interesting features of the year's tennis playing is the success which crowned Miss Mabel E. Cahill, still the best lady player in America. She came out there early the past year, and the defeat of Miss Bessie Moore, the brilliant New Jersey player, was the first victorious of this. For without improvement, particularly in backhand, Miss Moore would have defeated Miss Cahill. Miss Cahill had the element of endurance enforced into the last contest. Miss Moore would have defeated the latter had she had the brilliant Miss Cahill, for it was only by a long rest that Miss Cahill was able to recover her form. Her defeated Miss Roosevelt, Mrs. Morgan and Miss Burdette of Philadelphia, among her the title of champion of the United States, as well as ever, and she is now remarkably strong at the kilnest.

During August there will be a number of interesting open and invitation tournaments, which will bring the best American players with competes. The first of these is the open tournament of the Newport Casino, which will begin on Monday next. Her defeated Miss Roosevelt, Mrs. Morgan and Miss Burdette of Philadelphia, among her the title of champion of the United States, as well as ever, and she is now remarkably strong at the kilnest.

TENNIS HONORS,

Intense Interest in the National Saratoga and Newport Events.

Chase and Ryerson Will Represent the West; Hall, Howey, Halligey and Sand Beach Will Probably Represent the East.

[COPYRIGHT, 1892.]

Lawn tennis comes to town once a short-ous climax annually, and it is this climax, the championship series of the national association, which will see it next week in Newport. The Narragansett casino, a small-sized structure, with two adjoining buildings, and one acre of lawn, and its balconies and porches seat about about means for hundreds to view the matches. With groups of beautiful women decked in soft-tinted costumes, and with the greenery with the lawns and grey background of the casino, a scene of rare beauty is daily exhibited during these tournaments.

If the attendance at Newport last year is to be taken as a criterion, there will be a vast crowd of spectators on hand. Last year the porches, balconies and lawn of the casino were filled to overflowing. In fact, of the final contests, seats were arranged in a rectangle around the courts and even then many a fashionable visitor was forced to stand.

Joining Hand Saws.

The following directions for joining hand saws are given by the Defiance machine works: Bevel each end of the saw the length of two teeth. Make a good joint. Fasten the saw in brazing clamps with the back against the shoulder, and wet the joints with soldier water, or with a creamy mixture made by rubbing a lump of borax in about a teaspoonful of water on a slate. Put in the joint a piece of silver solder that will flow thereof, and clamp with iron heated to a light red heat until it melts. As soon as the solder flows, blacken the edges with water, and take them off between the saw, and file off the excessary, and file down to an even thickness, finishing by draw-filing lengthwise.

GEN. LEW WALLACE.

The Author of "Ben Hur" and His Home.

Possessed of a Charming Personality, and Proves Himself a Most Entertaining Host—His Most Inspirations Amid Rural Surroundings.

[COPYRIGHT, 1892.]

The veteran editor of the Journal at Evansville, Ind., James B. McNeely, recently said to me: "I suppose I had a hand in the first successful letter that ever was carried on by telegraph. I was the operator who used to send Lew Wallace's messages to the Electric. He was away back in—let me see; they were married in 1852.

Second to Gen. Wallace's porch in Crawfordsville a few days later I mentioned this circumstance.

"Yes," said the author of "Ben Hur," "McNeely is one of my ancient friends. I believe he did send my messages. It may have been the 'first courtship by telegraph,' he added, with a smile, "I don't know about that, but surely the telegraph was very young in those days."

By the way, Gen. Wallace's father was the member of congress who, only a short time before that courtship began, cast the deciding vote in the committee on commerce in favor of an appropriation to develop Samuel F. B. Morse's electric telegraph. Yet and the people of his district were so profoundly incensed by this "foolish and impracticable" and "wild, impractical scheme" that they refused to reelect him.

GEN. LEW WALLACE.

Crawfordsville in June is a delight to the soul. It is so soothingly quiet, so darkly cool, and the foliage is of such its great, clustering trees; so fresh, so fragrant; and Elston grove, in which Gen. Wallace has written so much of his finest inspiration, is the concentrated essence of the place. "The house, which is not pretentious, is set deep in a lawn thickly studded with beeches and maples and evergreen varieties of trees. Under these the walks and drives curve through leafy arbors and across bright, well-trimmed lawns, the whole making a picture restful to the senses and inspiring to the soul. Every now and then somebody who does not know or cannot appreciate the grandeur of this place comes to this alcove why he does not remove to one of the great cities, where he can have "literary environment." He was speaking of this when he interrupted himself to call my attention to a singularly handsome robin redbreast that had hopped down to a straight point at the junction of the walks, and was looking up at us in a sweet, military attitude as if he intended to dispute any attempt at departure which the visitor might make. The note of a great beech tree near at hand came dripping the tearful, far-away sounds of the wood thrush, and of a mourning dove, bewailing the very thought.

"See that bird?" said Gen. Wallace. "What better environment can anybody wish?"

And the ramshided him of a very important duty in most persons. In a straw berry box snugly tucked under the cornice of the porch, just over the front door, was a tiny nest in which an early brood of American sparrows had been reared.

"I must clean out that nest," said Gen. Wallace, "and make it ready for a pair of wee pensioners who are to come every year at about this time and set up housekeeping there."

This, Gen. Wallace, is the man who at bloody Monocacy led a handful of raw recruits against Jubal Early's overwhelming army—led them to inevitable defeat, and—saved the city of Washington.

Before we go into his workshop to pry into his literary methods, let us sit on the cool, green grass and become a much more potent influence than his sword ever was.

"It is difficult to say when I first began to write," he answers. "I was a wild boy and refused to great pairs all opportunities for a regular education. But along with that I was always a reader of everything. My father was a lover of books and had a fine library, which, of course, was always open to me. In my vacancies I was in the habit of taking a gun, a dog, a fishing rod and a book, and so I varied my amusements. When sixteen years of age I wrote a novel (about three hundred pages of closely-written manuscript) entitled 'The Man at Arms—A Tale of the Tenth Century.' It was my first work. With it, I used to amuse my young friends.

"In my eighteenth year I began a book which I called 'The Fair God.' From my earliest recollection Mexico was a country of great interest to me, and the story made of the invasion of Cortez was particularly agreeable. My first reading in that line was Robertson, which he succeeded by a pointer, also, and Prescott furnished me bread, meat, and wine. I had finished probably one hundred and fifty pages when the Mexican war broke out. This was irresistible to me. I got out my gun, bade fond adieu to my rabbit and went with it as second lieutenant. At the expiration of my time of service I came back to Indianapolis, where I resumed my study of the law, which I had before my enlistment put aside with my literary pastime. If ever you get your fingers on 'The Fair God' you will see that the beginning and the ending fragments of the writer. It does not show the maturity of the last part. All which includes in the capture of the city and 'Noche Triste' was written off and on after my return from Mexico. I was engaged in law and politics and the writing of 'The Fair God' about twelve years. I wrote this story only for pastime—for the delight of the publication of it. It filled up evenings and idle hours generally. Going to New York on one occasion I concluded for safety to slip the manuscript into my trunk and submit it to a publisher. While there I called on Mr. Appleton—he is the house of Osgood, Tickner & Co., Boston. They received the manuscript in confidence with the result that they undertook the publication of it on the usual terms.

"Then I wrote a number of magazine articles, and about 1874 I concluded that I would write a story of the days of Christ. The episode of the murder of the innocent was always a point of interest to me. What was the effect? Whereon did they base? How did it happen that they lost for that slaughter the sympathy of the world? It is a fine subject for the Gospel. But it was very

Then, he rolled up the sleeves of his patent refrigerating flannel shirt, thereby making a red-hot streak around his arms above the folds of the sleeves bound him.

"What we need," said he, "is another window in this place."

"Look here, McGillis," I protested, "I've been over that all the time, and it'll be the death of me. We don't want any more windows."

But at this point Billings, the poet who when he jumps into the water at Asbury park raises the tide all along the Jersey coast, climbed in with a commotion, for cutting loose one end of the room and swinging it on hinges.

It is only a shanty of boards that we inhabit, and the agent of the building, above the roof of which we stick out with the heads of us, has no objection to Billings' plan. When this Gigantic door was opened it let in a small hurricane directly upon my back. I should certainly have caught the worst kind of a cold in the head on the very first day if it hadn't been that Billings was so overjoyed at the success of his invention that he stood in the doorway most of the day, and though it was almost six feet wide, his presence was as good as half the door open.

That was what McGillis thought about it, and he objected so strenuously that Billings put his wife to work and invented another door for McGillis. This, when it was constructed, proved to be very favorable to the direct reference to the prevailing wind as Billings' door, so McGillis decided that something was necessary to produce a draft. The window over my desk (which they both insisted should be always open) did not suit McGillis—not when the entire sash was taken out, so he persuaded the agent to let him cut two holes in the wall, one on each side of the window.

The next day after these holes were made me raw and uncomfortable. Billings and McGillis said that it was the draft they'd been longing for. It cold and slimy wind was coming in the East river. McGillis called it a refreshing breeze, and he stepped out upon the roof to enjoy it, leaving his door open behind him. Then Billings did the same thing, and I turned on my cold soldier and shivered. The wind increased during the day till it amounted to a gale. My bi friends lay back in their chairs with their mouths open and gulped down the foggy air. Meanwhile I was struggling with a literary production into which I was throwing my best touches. It was an important piece of writing, designed to be seventy-two inches wide, with pictures in it. Most of it was about soap, but the remainder was made up of other toothes descriptive of the home life of the man who made the soap. I was going to put it down over my own signature that I had been to dinner at the gentleman's house, the assignment from the business office of the paper, and had had much more to eat than I usually get at home.

Well, this elaborate bit of character painting was being blown about fearfully by the wind which came in at the door designed by Mr. Billings and went out by the two holes in the wall, after creating a cooling pressure on the backs of my ears that made them stand out from my head like the sails of a schooner flapping wind and wind." Personally I don't care anything about the cool breezes. I am never too warm in summer. Perhaps this is because I was built so that when a torrid sunbeam falls upon me there is room for only a part of it to work, while the remainder goes around me in rings waiting for me to move.

But fat men are different. They can't stand the heat like the office with me, and they suffer terribly. Part of their misery is due to the fact that they wear any clothing in hot weather. They appear very mourning in negligee shirts which stick to their bodies like court plaster. Consequently, they spend large sums on patent linens and other cooling fabrics, which only make them look more ridiculous and add to their misery.

A DAY AT CAPE MAY.

We Can All Go There When Our Ship Comes In.

Meanwhile We Have to Be Satisfied with Reading of the Beauty and Grandeur of the Ocean and the Pleasures of the Fishily Beach.

[Special Washington Letter.]

There is no harm in envy unless it is permitted to grow into jealousy. I will be serious when you hear the story, and yet I believe not one of my readers will be envious.

Having received and accepted an invitation to make a trip to Cape May, N. J., and be a guest at the private hotel there for four days, I started on Friday morning with my wife and baby and arrived at the Cape about four o'clock in the afternoon. First let me tell you about the hotel.

It is one of the finest establishments of the kind on the Atlantic coast and can readily accommodate a thousand guests, giving each bedroom and parlor the best of food with prompt attention to every one of that number. It is situated about one hundred yards from the beach, and is so planned and cracked that nearly every room in the house can receive the ocean breeze. That same ocean breeze seems to be ceaseless in its efforts to fill the lungs and invigorate the systems of all who are fortunate enough to visit the coast.

The beach at Cape May is one of the safest in the world. For fully half a mile it slopes downward so gradually that an eight-year-old child can wade fully thirty yards into it without having the water come over his head, except as the big waves roll in. Under the circumstances, of course, there is no undertow along the beach, and no loss of life occurs at this point except through carelessness.

To reduce the peril of this pleasure to a minimum opposite each one of the hotels along the beach there is stationed a life boat, and I noticed as my head bobbles and shivered. The wind increased during the day till it amounted to a gale. My bi friends lay back in their chairs with their mouths open and gulped down the foggy air. Meanwhile I was struggling with a literary production into which I was throwing my best touches. It was an important piece of writing, designed to be seventy-two inches wide, with pictures in it. CALL FOR CONVENTION OF DEMOCRATIC CLUBS.

TEMPORARY HEADQUARTERS
THE DEMOCRATIC SOCIETY OF NEW JERSEY,
TRENTON, N. J., August 8, 1892.

Pursuant to article 9 of the Constitution of the Democratic Society of New Jersey a convention of the Clubs throughout the State composing said Society will be held at the city of

Camden, on Tuesday, Sept. 27, 1892,

Commencing at 10 o'clock a. m., for the purpose of electing officers and committees for the term of three years next ensuing, and the transaction of such other business as may belong to the work of the Society. Which might be presented.

All organized Democratic Clubs are requested in the State Society and said ind to representation, as the principles governing that matter are as the following:

ORGANIZATION OF THE SOCIETY.

To foster the formation of permanent Democratic Societies and Clubs throughout the State, and inculcate sound principles of government, teaching Jeffersonian principles of government.

To preserve the independence of the United States, the autonomy of the States, local self-government and individual liberty.

To resist revolutionary changes and to conserve constitutional rights.

To organize the Democracy of the State beyond the necessities of government economically administered.

To promote economy in all branches of the public service.

To oppose unnecessary commercial restrictions for the benefit of the few to the detriment of the many.

To oppose class legislation, which despoils labor and builds up monopolies.

To maintain inviolate the fundamental principles of Democracy—"Equality before the law."

and

To co-operate with the regular organization of the Democratic party in support of Democratic men and Democratic measures.

DELEGATES TO CONVENTION.

In convention the members of this Society shall be entitled to the same number and kind of local delegates for every fifty members in good standing as the same are entitled to in the State Society or Utah shall be entitled to more than two delegates.

It is particularly desirable that every Democratic organization in our State become members of the State Society at once and have a full representation in the Convention of the 27th inst.

The secretary of the State Society will furnish forms of "Application for Membership," and for Credentials for delegates to the Convention.

The Democratic voters of every ward and township are urged to organize one or more Clubs immediately and to notify the Recording Secretary of this Society without delay, for it is contemplated by all that this organization will do much in each ward a grand victory for both State and National tickets in November next.

The permanent headquarters of the State Society will be established at the city of Trenton, the capital city, early in September.

A DEVELOPED ANSWER.

When the Congressional Committee were inquiring into the labor troubles at the Carnegie steel plant at Pittsburg the manager was asked the cost of producing a ton of steel rails.

He declined to answer, alleging that such data were private business and therefore privileged.

The question was fair and proper, and the refusal of the manager certainly suspicious.

The Engineering and Mining Journal now attacks the Carnegie brush heap with a sharp stick and reveals to view a large and grinning colored gentleman.

That journal declares, and has the figures to back its assertion, that the cost of making a ton of steel rails at the Carnegie works does not exceed $20, including all material and labor, and that the selling price is $32.

There you have developed the business of Harrison-McKinley millionaire protection, thirty-three per cent. monopolistic profit.

Will may the pampered bosses live in regal style abroad, and on coaching tours cause the highlands of Scotland to resound with gleeful shouts in praise of American Protection.

THE POPULAR DEMAND.

A thoroughly honest and conscientious Presidency of the United States is needed. A man who will serve the people with single devotion to the general public welfare, and one whom corruptionists and sordid conspirators dare not approach.

Honesty is the popular demand.

Honesty, unflinching honesty, is the richest and brightest gem any man can possess and wear, "it is the ruby of personal character."

Honesty is far superior to coffered millions, to the pride of ancestry, or the most commanding genius, because it will honorably and faithfully discharge every obligation of life with alacrity and even-handed justice.

In business pursuits practical honesty is well invested capital, and in the political arena honesty becomes the only sure guarantee of public prosperity.

An honest man, as a candidate for official position, is pre-eminently worthy of popular support, for the substantial reason, that he will never allow the plotting politician to outrank the sturdy patriot.

Such a man is the Democratic nominee for the Presidency.

POLITICAL INTELLIGENCE.

Col. Pearson, hitherto a leading North Carolina Republican, announces that in future he will act and vote with the Democratic party.

What has wrought such a change of political sentiment?

It is the result of intelligent investigation now going on throughout the land, North, South, East and West.

The Colonel says he has carefully studied McKinley tariff protectionism and is convinced that the workingmen of this country derive no benefit from it.

That is a proven fact, and in reference to it the following remarks of the Buffalo Courier are opportune:

"In the very nature of things, the longer the McKinley act remains on the statute-book, the more serious will become industrial disorder in this country. All the theories and sophistries of partisans cannot reconcile the people to the enormous iniquities of that law. Time and experience will make its stone is enough to justify increased opposition and protest to the most oppressive political war against the masses and the party responsible for it."

Senator Hoar says in his campaign letter from Paris that the Democrats deny in their platform the existence of any power in the Government to help manufacturers. Oh, no. The platform is understood well enough by Mr. Hoar who says that he would be greatly helped by a repeal of the duties on coal and iron ore. His name is Amos. He was Governor of Massachusetts two years ago, and is now a leading Republican politician. There are several hundred manufacturers in Massachusetts who agree with ex-Gov. Ames on this point. There are others who say that a repeal of the duties on wool would assist manufacturers. Congressman Stevens is one of these. Senator Hoar knows him very well. Now, the Democratic party offered to repeal the abatement clothing the recent session of Congress by repealing the duties on wool, but Mr. Hoar and his allies in the Senate would not even consider the bill. Is not Mr. Hoar as big a snob bumbug as he is a Force Bill humbug? —Evening Post.

DEMOCRATIC CLUBS.

It is a debt due by every Democrat to his country to devote all his energies to the task of organized duties, whose end and aim is the advancement of the Democratic party. It matters not what the size of the district may be or how few the number of known Democrats in it, the few that are there should combine and organize themselves into a club. There is room for all the younger leaders of the party, and the younger they are the more life and energy they have to spare in working, while the older and more experienced heads do the thinking. If these young men take hold of the reins with a will their success is assured. Meeting forcefully and intelligently, they will not only serve to strengthen the local Democracy by drumming up the laggards, but will also avail to influence many who at present halt between opinions and fails would leap into the arms of the Democracy, but that they fear to fall. A few timely words of encouragement and a kindly, cordial talking such that occur at a club meeting will be more likely to win them over to the cause, which, in their heart of hearts, they believe to be that of truth and justice, than if a dozen campaign pamphlets and oratory that can be inflicted upon them.

The Republican party is well alive to the powerful service which such agencies can render to the cause of the Democracy—Reading Herald.

To organize clubs in every ward and township are urged to organize one or more Clubs immediately and to notify the Recording Secretary of this Society without delay, for it is contemplated by all that this organization will do much in each ward a grand victory for both State and National tickets in November next.

FOR GOOD GOVERNMENT.

Another Campaign Club Organized With Major Robert Burnett as President.

Another evidence of the unprecedented enthusiasm that is spreading all over the country for Cleveland, Stevenson and good government was given last night at the organization of a campaign club, Tuesday night, which brought together elements that have never before taken a public part in politics, and the meeting was held in a spacious room rented for the purpose in the Crescent rink building. There were present a large gathering of young men of the city and borough, some of whom will vote the Democratic ticket this fall for the first time.

J. A. Demarest was chairman of the meeting, which was a most harmonious one. The following officers were chosen unanimously:

President—Major Robert L. Burnett.
Vice-presidents—Henry Ely, Joseph W Yates, James R. Clark and V. L. Pruyn.
Secretary—Karl Wurster.
Treasurer—H. W. Marshall.

The organization is called the Cleveland & Stevenson Campaign club. Its membership already exceeds fifty, and it seems destined to be the leading political organization of the city and borough. The next meeting will be held on Monday evening, the 29th inst., to which all friends of good government are cordially invited. The room will be open all day hours, to everybody, from now until the close of the campaign, and all kinds of political literature will be furnished gratuitously.

A uniformed marching squad will be formed of those who may desire to join. A banner will probably be swung across the street in a few weeks.

MR. BUELL CALLED UPON.

The United States Government Appeals to a Plainfield Resident for Help and Gets It—Some Most Interesting Facts About Telegraphy Now Published for the First Time.

Among the features of the Post Office department's public exhibit at the Columbian exposition, will be the original telegraphic instruments used by the government on the first telegraph line erected in this country—Washington to Baltimore. Half a dozen—if those instruments can be got. The government owned the line and operated it for two years after it was completed, and his associates being regularly paid officials of the United States. After that time—say from December, 1846, to March 3, 1847—the instruments were leased to S. Messrs. Vail & Rogers; but to-day the U. S. government yet own and operate them. Postmaster General Wanamaker passed out of the knowledge of the government, and now, when it is desired to make a feature of these first instruments, the Postmaster General has called with no information as to their whereabouts. Consequently, third assistant postmaster general, Madison Davis, sends an official communication to Charles E. Buell, of this city, asking him to help the government out.

Mr. Buell is chief clerk in the bureau of religious statistics of the present census, with its office on North avenue. During the last census Mr. Buell had charge of telegraph and telephone statistics. Upon the receipt of Mr. Davis's request he at once forwarded the information desired. It is the privilege of THE PRESS to be the first to publish the following interesting matter from Mr. Buell's communication:

The receiving instruments which were first used by Morse in connection with the telegraph line extending from Washington to Baltimore, about 1844, are believed to be in existence. One registers by the possession of the descendants of Mr. Vail, who worked with Morse. This family lives at, or near, Morristown. The other register, for it required two—part of each terminal—is, I believe, in the possession of the Western Union Telegraph company, at their main office, corner of Broadway and Dey street, New York city. This company also has some of the original vouchers, etc., relating to construction of this first telegraph line, together with some of the wire, etc., used in the first line.

The original first message, "What Hath God Wrought," was given to me at Allentown, at Hartford. It having been received on a strip of paper, the only way these known of receiving. Frank L. Pope, a well-known lawyer, of New York city, was at one time custodian of the Morse appliances, A Mr. Haddon, or Haddon, who was connected with the American Telegraph company, is now in the possession of the original agreement between Prof. Morse and Mr. Vail, relating to the construction of the first line.

The dynamo and magneto machines are now a factor in the telegraph system. The first magneto machine ever made was by Joseph Saxton, of the United Coast survey. He was from Philadelphia, but lived at the time on Fourand-a-Half street, Washington. The machine was made for the extension of his sister, Mrs. Pendleton, who, at last accounts, lived in Washington. The first dynamo was the very first of this type; the statement about Pixii, of Europe, to the contrary, not withstanding. The facts are that Saxton employed Pixii to make a second machine, based upon Pixii made some slight change in the form of construction and started out with what he had made on a tour of exhibition, clearing all at a profit.

The Western Union Telegraph company are employing dynamos in producing the currents used in their telegraphing. The first dynamo was made by Charles G. Page, of the patent office, as early as 1837-8. Mr. Page saw and heard the sparks and noise, and conceived of the idea of changing the rapidly alter making contacts into a continuous current, which he did by the addition to the Saxton machine, of what he was pleased to call a "collector," but what is now termed a commutator. The first dynamo was exhibited by Page in 1840-41 at Washington. Telegraphic line that had been constructed between Washington and Baltimore. The first dynamo ever made was also made by Page by Isaac Davis, 31 Cornhill street, Boston, and is now in possession of Professor Jacques, of Philadelphia. The dynamo was a crude affair, but it was the first. Page, and it is stated that it would produce a weight of 1,200 pounds, or beat a foot of platinum wire No. 28 to incandescence. This small dynamo is not yet completed in the currents produced by a small motor.

The first company for electric lighting was at Paris, Compagnie d'Alliance. Their apparatus was made from plans of Cleeb and Wallets, but differed from the Page machine and claimed it as his invension, and it seems that the Clark machine is returned to in some histories as the first invention of Wallets.

To Prof. Henry was due the development of the motor function of electricity or at least means by which electro-magnetic power can be exerted, making succeeding steps comparatively easy and laying the foundation for all subsequent forms of electromagnetic telegraphs and motor mechanisms; and the first applications of this function in a practical commercializing telegraph was by S. F. B. Morse, and first of saleen telegraphs by Moses G. Farmer of Salem.

The first induction apparatus was invented by Charles G. Page, and descriptions of the same were published in Silliman's Journal and Sturgeon's Annals, England, in 1838. This appliance is now an important factor in the practice of telephoning, as well as in electric lighting, and other uses.

The Page apparatus was improved upon at Hitchie, an instrument maker, of Boston; so that sparks which would overcome more than a foot air space were produced. In 1850 Prof. Rathbone ordered an induction coil of Rumkhorff, an instrument maker of Paris, informing him that Mr. Hitchie, of Boston, had made improvements, and giving Rumkhorff one of Hitchie's coils, which he dissected and from which he made one identical, claiming it as his invention. The French scientific journals were immediately glowing with descriptions and praise of the wonderful invention of M. Rutukorf, and the French Institute awarded the concern's prize of 50,000 francs to Rumkhorff as the inventor of the induction coil. It is positively known that some of the members of the Institute were conversant with all the facts and had seen Hitchie's coil. M. Rumkhorff accepted the francs. Prof. Tyndall continued to as Englishman a discovery made years before by Prof. Page, and by him published in Silliman's Journal. It would be hard instruction to say he did it ingenuously, being the best read man in New England. This learned and eloquent Prof. Tyndall attributed the discovery of the vibration of "Traveling Bars" to George Gore of England, although the same discoveries were announced eight years before Gore's experiments in Silliman's Journal.

The first sub-marine cable was laid by Prof. Morse, in New York Harbor. The first submarine cable laid in the sea was those of Cyrus W. Field. The first electro-magnet with a polarized armature, which makes the quadruplex system of telegraphing practicable was made by Prof. Henry. The first multiple telegraph was by Moses G. Farmer in Boston, one year before the experiments of Dr. Gray and Prof. Elisha Gray, and Edison having the credit of a practical solution of multiple transmission, all previous attempts having confessed experiments. The condenser to neutralize the electro-static charge in telegraphic lines—the pre-requisite of practical duplex transmission—was practically used in the year 1850 by Mr. Barnard, of Mississippi.

CO VCT NO INOCENT MAR.

Trial's The Hosts of Plainfield's Corporation Counsel.

Patrick Keesy was convicted Wednesday on the charge of rescuing a horse from officer Frisbie, while that officer was in the act of taking the same to the pound. Keesy claimed in the trial that even if Frisbie had wrongfully taken the horse in the first instance that would not justify Keesy in taking the horse into his own possession, the animal as the same was being quietly driven to the pound. Other remarks were open if the first taking was unlawful. The city judge sustained this view of the law, and Keesy was convicted and fined $5.

In the second case, the charge was that Keesy unlawfully resisted an officer while that officer in the discharge of his duty was attempting to arrest Keesy for violation of an ordinance. In this case Frank Wilson, who was relied upon by the city as the principal witness for the prosecution, gave evidence for the defense, stating that officer Frisbie took the horse from the middle of a public street and himself struck the first blow. His testimony was so clear and straightforward that at the conclusion the corporation counsel declared to the court that he could not conscientiously ask for a conviction, and therefore he moved that the court instruct the jury to find the defendant not guilty. The court agreed with counsel and directed the verdict.

Corporation counsel Marsh declared that in his position as prosecuting officer for the city, he never had asked a jury to convict a man when the evidence would not warrant a conviction, and he never would. Some people, he said, regarded it as the duty of a lawyer, even in criminal cases, to win a verdict if possible, right or wrong, but that was not his view, however, nor the view of the mayor or the common council.

A Pretty Surprise.

A beautifully illustrated and charmingly bound volume entitled "Pretty Pictures and Poetics", the most popular long poem ever published by an American author, and one of the most famous poems in the language, just published, is a pretty surprise for book lovers. It is in large type, beautiful and expressive illustrations, very fine and heavy paper, gilt edges, and in all its handsome cloth binding, with gilt title and ornaments. No illustrated edition has ever before been published at so low a price as $1.50, and in view of what you might "guess" the price of this to be, but it isn't—it sells for only 79 cents, plus 10 cents for postage. This price covers only about the actual cost of manufacture by the 100,000, the publisher's object being, not profit on this edition, but to introduce it and what he makes on the publication will not add by dealers, but only direct. Catalogues over 300 pages free. Or, if you prefer, you can get it from any bookseller or news dealer. Every home should be glad to have a copy of this book, and no one should buy a cheap, poor edition of this poem, when for a few cents more a superb edition can be had. Address John B. Alden, publisher, 27 Rose street, New York.

SEEMINGLY INCREDIBLE.

INFLUENCE OF THE MENTAL POWERS OVER THE BODY.

The Vitality of a Person in the Power of Another—Instances of Startling Character—Interesting Facts, If True.

[From The Providence (R.I.) Star]

On the 14th day of December last a Boston lady, Mrs. Annie Burnham Bunnage, died under circumstances of the most unusual and startling character. Her husband, a well-known and popular physician of that city, stood by her bedside and watched her as she breathed her last. Then he closed her eyes and left the room. Her body was placed in a coffin and buried. Her husband, who had been stepped as mysteriously as by a word. The cold locked at the young and the young up into the faces of the old, and asked them to explain. Not one of them could. Then he called in a number of our best physicians, skilled in the practice of medicine, and asked them to investigate. They did so, and from the lips of the mother who take the body of her child to Boston he learned the facts as given above. The lady's name is Mrs. Mary B. Young of 29 Harlem street, New York city. Her husband, when asked if he knew this Boston physician, replied that he was glad to be able to say that he did, that he had seen him perform what seemingly treated and cured by him, that in their old age, through his treatment, they found themselves young again. "This physician," continued Mr. Hopkins, "as the most brainy, able and brilliant doctor of this age, if not of any other age. Why, sir, my wife was dying when I left her two months ago. When we entered his presence he told us both our troubles in detail, and what troubles we had had in life, and what our difficulties, without asking us a question, better than we could have told him. It is a fact, and I feel that hundreds in this city will know that this man can detect and describe the disease of man, woman or child, the most hidden and intricate diseases, as he would read an open book. It is a fact, and a marvel, a mystery, and his cures when others fail are so wonderful as his examination."

Hon. J. Willard Rice of Boston, brother of ex-Gov. Rice, was visited by your reporter on his return from the Pine Tree State. "You have been a patient of Dr. Flower?" he queried as we introduced ourselves. "What do you think of him as a doctor?"

A broad smile covered the face of the fat and portly man as he leaned back in his easy chair. "I think", was his reply, "that Dr. R. C. Flower is one of the most able, learned and successful physicians of the age, and as a most genial and fascinating man and as brilliant as a star."

Henry A. Follett of Woonsocket, R. I., said: "I have been a terrible sufferer for twelve years with liver disease and piles. I had tried the leading physicians of this country without avail. After a few years, I consulted Dr. R. C. Flower of Boston. He told me my trouble as soon as he saw me, without me telling anything. I began treatment with him and began to improve at once, and in four or five months was cured."

J. H. Tucker, a prominent farmer of Lebanon, N. H., says: "Dr. R. C. Flower has cured me of a most serious stomach and bowel trouble, together with aggravated kidney disease, after all other physicians had given me up to die. I was in absolute despair when I visited Dr. Flower. I had been disappointed by doctors in their vain attempts to cure me. I was a mere wreck of my former's treatment than I began to improve; my cure seems miraculous. Look at me. I am in the finest of health; I owe it all to him. And that is not all. Dr. Flower told me my troubles when I visited him without asking me a question and told me how I suffered. He is a wonder."

F. W. Turner of New Britain, Ct., said: "I had been given up to die by five physicians, who pronounced my disease incurable consumption. I was induced to go to Dr. R. C. Flower by a young lady whom he had cured. As soon as he saw me he went back into my life and told me all the secrets of my past history. When I went to him I did not expect to get well, but when I left him I felt in my soul that I should be cured. He inspires the confidence of a man, as nobody else can. Well, I placed myself under his treatment, I began to improve at once, and in a few months was well."

Mrs. Edwin Norton of Essex, Conn., a most pleasing lady, smiled in answer to the question, Do you know Dr. R. C. Flower of Boston? as she replied: I should think I did. Why, sir, he cured me of the most dreadful stomach and heart trouble woman ever had, also of nervous prostration. I had been a dreadful sufferer for over twelve years, had doctored with numerous physicians without benefit. Began to improve immediately under Dr. Flower's treatment and in a few months was cured."

Your reporter returned to Boston for the purpose of seeing Dr. R. C. Flower, whom he, too, failed to see on his return from the Pine Tree State. After waiting two hours, he was shown into the doctor's private sanctum, and said: "What can I do for you?" was the doctor's greeting. "I have come to ask you a few questions", was the scribe's reply, as he produced pencil and note book, "and you must make your questions few and brief." "Doctor, you seem to be revolutionizing the practice of medicine in the treatment of chronic diseases. Will you tell me how you cure those desperate cases of consumption, cancer, tumor and paralysis?" "Well", was his slow and deliberate answer. "I understand my business and I attend faithfully to it, and I can tell any sick person his trouble without being told; consequently it's not a pastime for the wrong disease. I have every facility for treating those supposed incurable diseases that money and experience can give."

You must like your practice, doctor. "Yes, I like it so much that I give about fourteen hours a day to it. I have been talking to two ladies in your reception room who tell me that you cured them one of a monstrous tumor, which weighed when it was removed 18 pounds, without pain or the knife, the other of two malignant cancers after the knife had pronounced them incurable by the best surgeons and physicians of this city. "Yes", was the doctor's reply, "this is true. One of these ladies is the wife of a prominent manufacturer in Haverhill, Mass., and the other the wife of a large manufacturer in Haverhill, Mass."

Doctor, you believe these troubles you are curable? "Can as curable as any other disease". "Will you tell me how you tell a man his trouble without being told?" "Yes, I will explain. I am relieved from explaining the modus operandi of my examinations, but that I do. Some other time I will explain it to you, and you will admit."

One other question, doctor. How did you come to make this great discovery? "I was led to it by a long and varied experience. I would not undertake one if I had you. I frequently cure people this way, though it is hard on me to do so. It is only in desperate cases that I attempt it. You must excuse me now", he said, and most politely bowed the knight of the quill out of his room. Guests seemed to be waiting in all the rooms of his large building to see him. How does Dr. Flower perform these cures? How can he tell the sick their diseases without being told that he does some will deny, but the question is still unanswered as to how. How? How!

PLAINFIELD, Aug. 17, 1892.

A. A. McLeod, President Philadelphia & Reading Rd. Co.

DEAR SIR:—Many of my readers insist that the Reading "steal", so-called, was solely for the purpose of increasing the price of coal.

They point to the fact that it has been raised 25 cents a ton in this city within a few weeks, and another rise is threatened. Is there any truth in these stories?

Are the dealers here paying any more for coal to-day than they were a month ago? Is the cost to consumers to be further increased? Very truly yours,

J. A. DEMAREST.

PHILADELPHIA & READING RR. CO.,
PRESIDENT'S OFFICE,
PHILADELPHIA
Aug. 18, 1892.

Mr. J. A. Demarest.

DEAR SIR:—Replying to your favor of the 17th instant, I ought not to be expected to take, from my very pressing duties, time necessary to answer all the questions which are put to me by people who do not understand the object of the Reading lessons. One is to hold responsible for the action of local dealers in raising the prices of coal.

I would, however, remind consumers that the average price for coal, for many years, according to seasons and demands, and this year has been no exception to the general rule other than that during the winter the prices which the producers received were ruinously low, and by the efforts of the Reading management we have been able to raise them to a level which will insure to them a fair profit, but we are not getting as much as we should to enable us to realize a reasonable profit. Yours truly,

A. A. McLEOD,
President.

Bitter warfare is now being waged between the Plainfield News and the Plainfield Courier, Editor Runyon, of the latter, has been made the object of considerable newspaper attention, getting all of the blame from the local Republicans, whose organ the Courier is. The editorial contest is fast developing into a factional fight among the leaders of the Republican party, and the local Republican bosses fear that the disruption will affect their party's vote at the polls in the fall.

Following the suggestion, I have been using the same with the most gratifying results. To those similarly afflicted let me suggest the manner of their use. A similar accident occurred in front of Elm street.

The motorman on car No. 1 of the Plainfield street railway company, coming up Front street, Thursday afternoon, noticed letter carrier Dunn's spirited horse dancing all over the tracks ahead of him. As in the custom in such cases, the car was slowed up but still the horse would back down in the gutter and swing the two-wheel sulky behind him around and around. But as soon as the car was run close up to him, he quieted down. Mr. Dunn then explained that the horse was frightened by a spinning lawn sprinkler that was playing in front of ex-councilman Sorrell's house.

A GENUINE LOVE MATCH.

Two Food Young Hearts Wedded That Could Not Brook Delay.

The many friends of Miss Philopena Bilmm, better known as Bessie, daughter of Jason Bilmm of 20 Sumner avenue, will be surprised to learn of her marriage. The happy young man is George Strayer of Williamsport, Pa., who for some time has been a resident of North Plainfield.

Miss Bilmm accompanied Strayer to the Venetian carnival at Cranford, the evening of August 6, and that night they were quietly married. The pair did not disclose the fact to her parents, and the groom contented himself with occasional visits to the home. But last Saturday they left town, ostensibly to visit Rhodorado, and took up their new residence in Brooklyn. Bessie sent an affectionate letter to her father on Monday, announcing the fact of the marriage. She said she was very happy, and urged her parents to visit them at their new home.

Mr. and Mrs. Bilmm are naturally grieved at their daughter's taking such an important step without consulting them, and regret that Bessie did not wait till she was older. She is but a little over 16. But Bessie is such a good and lovable girl, and George is such an industrious and deserving young man, that reconciliation is sure to come speedily.

To-day it is doing well, but the fright and pain have did not permanently affect its eyesight.

Plainfield is very happy with its trolley railway.

ON WITH THE ROAD!

Rattling Better Ball Team Found for the Plainfield's Royal Blue Line Stands to Cross the Foundation Over the South.

Mayor Saunders of North Plainfield is home from a trip West. He arrived in Plainfield Thursday and said: "I spent half a day riding on a suspended air railway in Wisconsin, made on an underground principle by Prof. Langley, inventor of the Connelly-motor, and in fact tested and personally experienced every kind of street railway in use, but I found nothing so near perfection as the Plainfield street railway. Some day something practicable and economical will come out of these inventions, but just now for small suburban towns the overhead trolley is the only method possible."

In answer to a question as to what is the present status of the sewerage question in the matter, the mayor said he would advise calling a meeting of the council which the public would be invited to attend, and there vote yea or nay on the matter for or against the Plainfield company. This he would suggest alone so that a franchise could be granted without any obligations, and then the operation within a month or two. His idea is that it should run out Somerset street to the notch.

THE BOROUGH FIRE-GONG.

North Plainfield Adopts a Modern Electrical System, and Steps Her Long to Save Mutual Bonds.

Warren Engine company, No. 1, of North Plainfield, has accepted the new fire-gong that has been tested so much of late. The blowing of the steam may be distinguished from that of Plainfield, by its hollow sound. The city's gong gives a full and solid resonant sound. The borough gong will be sounded only one night at 9, when the electric light station has a good pressure of steam. It will not blow at noon. The engine company pays the entire cost of the gong, about $130. The improvement was made through the efforts of the hustling young foreman, George H. Fairchild. The borough will be divided into four districts—by means of speaker tubes, and by Jackson avenue and Park place into quarters. There will be four electric buttons in the engine house. In case of alarm there will notify the electric light engineer that there is a fire, and of its location. He will then give the alarm by blowing the number of the district on the whistle. It is hoped that ultimately the borough will have a signal-box system similar to Plainfield's.

THE TIMES' M'K'S ADDRESS THEM.

One Thousand Pamphlets for Cleveland and Stevenson and Good Government, Distributed to Individuals and Listen to Bishop County's Great Oration, Below a Message and Reply.

Senator Frederick C. Marsh, the Hon. James E. Martine and State Enumerator John Matthews, addressed a thousand auditors gathered at Springfield Thursday evening to raise a banner to Cleveland and Stevenson. The enthusiasm was great, the pyrotechnical display was brilliant and the whole affair was unusually successful.

Among those present were mayor Haynes, of Newark, and distinguished citizens of Orange, Rahway and Somerset. There was a band and drum and fife corps. After the outdoor meeting an adjournment was made to the town hall where the orator and host for good government and the Democratic National candidates still overflowed.

A Revival of the Famous Illusion.

Only a few more opportunities remain to see the wonderful performances of Professor and Magician at the Eden Musee on West 23d street, N. Y., as those renowned artists close their very successful engagement in two weeks. The final performances are characterized by a revival of the startling illusion "She", which has puzzled the scientific world to explain. They will retain the Cave of the Winter season with a new programme, to the delight of the large clientele which their merits have gained them. Other novelties will be introduced by fast engagements and visitors can always rely upon seeing a clean and pleasing stage entertainment. The feature of the Musee is the progressive introduction of new figures and groups into the mammoth collection of waxworks. During the warm season the Winter Garden is reserved for Sohlke's Orchestra of Social means and is a charming place in which to while away an afternoon or evening. The Historical Gallery is very popular and is alone worth the price of admission. Grand concerts by the Hungarian band are largely patronized. Artists are engaged to produce casts of the faces of Cleveland and Harrison which will be placed on view soon. Every visitor will be given a vote to be cast for his favorite president, and the result will be widely published.

What Caused It, That?

(Plainfield Courier.)

One of Coddington Brothers' ice wagons nearly ran into a street car at the corner of South avenue and Second street, on Wednesday. The horses turned quickly, throwing the driver out. They ran about two blocks before being captured.

WOMAN OF FASHION.

Bargains to Be Had in Summer Wear.

Cheaper Ginghams and Dimities—A Little Talk on Making Over Dresses—Seen by the Scissors—Cool and Dainty Frocks.

[COPYRIGHT, 1892.]

Surely no one can buy almost everything for absolut nothing these days. The bargain counters in the city stores are vieing with each other in prices that are very low. Just take a run into town for a day or two, and you will be surprised. If you enter the shops, to find them crowded in spite of the summer exodus. This morning I entered one to find extraordinary confusion, and more reckless pushing than usual. For, though New Yorkers are proverbially good-natured and obliging in a crowd, I think the New York shopper must be exempt. For she has absolutely no consideration and no feeling of any sort. She simply steps over her victim, and never so much as casts a backward glance to discover the extent of the damage wrought. After I had succeeded in making my way past a great number of these human beings with only a few unimportant injuries, I discovered that the center of interest was a table piled high with soft woolen checks and stripes, marked at 40 cents a yard, worth 60 cents. Well, really we are all taken in! Anything marked at 50 cents and worth 60 is passed by with perfect indifference, but anything marked exactly the same, but with the estimate of 40 cents or 41 put on it, is snatched at by all of the women, in a truly hawk's fashion. It is certainly a most narrowing sight to watch them swoop down upon the salesman, and snap their prizes before some one else shall interpose.

But when a woman can buy gauze shirts for nineteen cents apiece, in all the dainty colors; stockings all sizes, and styles and colors for the same price; ten ties for ninety-eight cents, white skirts for forty-nine, gloves for nineteen, duck skirts with ten to three dollars, shirt-waists for sixty-nine cents, blazers for two dollars and a half, hats with ribbon band for twenty-five cents, and last, but not least, shot silk parasols for forty-nine cents, it seems as though no woman could possibly have any trouble in procuring a summer outfit for next to nothing. Then ginghams can be had for five cents a yard, cutting cloth for eight cents, dimities, fresh and clean, for twelve cents, organzing cambrics for four, and a great many other materials for about the same his attire. He had ordered the coat in a soft-finished dark blue, and another in black and white. For the coat to go with the coat he had picked out some very pretty cheviots in blue and gray. The style in the garment will be double breasted, the roll to correspond with that of the coat.

In single-breasted wear the style is on the same general plan, long and rather tight-fitting. The new orders for these is diagonals, cassimeres and in a mass of fine-faced goods. There will be an outside breast-pocket to be seen in the double-breasted. The sleeves in both styles will be cut rather narrow, following out the original conception of departing as far as possible from the "flopping and baggy" fashion of the past few seasons.

Sack coats will be thirty-two inches for a man five feet eight in height and proportionately shorter or longer for price. So that it wouldn't be a very great matter to get up a summer outfit at a low cost. The dealer very rarely, indeed, with the addition of a little braiding or trimming, and then a ginghum mates so well that it can always be kept fresh.

A pretty one, which I have just been admiring is of a very deep shrimp pink. The first side is caught half way up and trimmed with a narrow black velvet ribbon, of which there is a certain quantity on the round bodice as well.

I also liked a blazer suit that is going over a silk skirt in fine rich tawn, spotted with pale turquoise blue dots. A turquoise silk waist matched the dots, and the jacket fronts were made to open, to display a good deal of the pretty shade.

The girl that wears this has one of the advantages of the exquisite summer gowns I have not seen. It is made of pure white cotton, a delicate sprigged silk. I think it is the prettier for its perfect simplicity. The skirt is a gathered one, and has a flounce of a yard. The bodice is simply shirred on a standing collar, and gathered in at the waist under a belt. She will wear an all white hat with this gown and white gloves and shoes.

A quaint gown for afternoons is made of pink crepon, and has for a trimming on its close fitting skirt two ruffles at the edge, then three bands of black velvet ribbon quite far apart, and then two more ruffles, so that the trimming is almost half way up. The bodice is perfectly plain and tight fitting, and is trimmed with two about eight inches deep, which starts at the collar in the back and is carried down in an inverted V to the waist line, under the arms; then it is rolled straight till the two ends join in front with frogs, where they both stop, and below has a pronine petticoat, while little black velvet bows stand over them like sentinels.

Or do you like white lines? That makes a charming afternoon gown, with the skirt embroidered in a pretty vine pattern all around, and edged with a narrow flounce of white accordion-de side, and a bodice of the same, fully plaited.

A fishing party that starts out next week will include at least one very pretty and rather daring costume. The young maiden that will wear it is going to be feminine work; she's bound she'll catch something, and that her costume will not be blown with the fishing-rod and in the sport. So her slightly-draped skirt of dark blue linen reaches only a little below the knees, and is made of two linen, light fitting, trimmed with a deep lace, folded back from the front down, so that it can't get or become troublesome, by dark blue straps over the shoulders which are fastened on the top of the skirt by big buttons. The bag is slung across her shoulders, and carries her fly-book, and she wears her broad-rimmed hat of the same heavy lace that trims the dress, shading her own face, thus it really is both wind and wave, and even fish.
